Man Held for Property Law Violation. Spurns Bail: Says Jail Is Cheaper.

WORE COLLAR 6 YEARS

Has the Same $6 Suit for Four Years -Walks Six Miles to Save One Cent on Loaf of Bread-. Hurts to Spend.

New York .-- John Sangster, warrant officer of Jamaica, went to Ozone Park, Queens, to arrest William Mohrpear in court after being summoned for alleged violation of a fire ordinance at his garage in Ozone Park. Sangster knew that Mohrmann, besides owning a garage, owned three apartment houses in Queens and was worth at least $100,000. He expected to find Mohrmann living in a fine house with many servants.

before he could locate his man. Finally he was directed to an old, dilapidated barn on the outskirts of the town, where he was told Mohrmann could be found. Sangster found the barn locked, but in the boards of one side he found a hole which had been stuffed with burlap. He pulled this out and a hand came through the crack from the inside and grabbed the burlap. Sangster seized the hand and pulled. He pulled out part of the barn and with the boards came Mohrmann.

Mohrmann was taken to Jamaica before Magistrate Conway. There he feat the high cost of living. He paid $6 four years ago for the suit of clothing he wore, and said rather proudly that he had worn the same collar for six years. His statement was not doubted by any one in court.

And to get the food he walked six miles to a grocery that sold bread for a cent a loaf less than the ones in Ozone Park.

"I am living according to my own way," Mohrmann told the court, "and I do not care how much people laugh. I have no family to support, and I would rather live in a barn honestly than in a palace and be in debt. I enjoy it, and that is more than most men are doing nowadays. They "re trying to do too much and live beyon ! their means. I am going to live long and within my means and in contentment."

Magistrate Conway held Mohrmann for further examination, and the man was asked if he would not send for some one to bail him out. "Certainly not," he replied. "It is so comfortable here in the jail and, besides, the meals are free."

"Perhaps you will spend some of your money to buy necessary comforts?" a policeman suggested.

"I could not do it," said Mohrmann. "It hurts me much less to be "uncomfortable than to spend money."

GIRL HANGS BY HER HAIR

Caught in Shafting in Factory She Refuses to Have Tresses Cut Until Scalp Tears.

Burlington, N. J .- Refusing to permit companions to cut her beautiful hur when the strands were caught in the shafting above a loom she was operating in the Burlington Silk Mills, Miss Emma Hoffman, nineteen, hung suspended while rescuers tried to extract the hair, until her scalp was torn off.

Other young women fainted, but retaining consciousness despite her suffering, Miss Hoffman pleaded with fellow employees not to cut her hair, and they supported her weight while it was being extracted strand by strand from the pulley.

Dr. Richard Anderson found it nec essary to remove more of the hair to stitch back and save about 20 square inches of scalp.
