

BREVARD INSTITUTE NOTES.

On Friday evening the ladies of the faculty were entertained by Miss Pike, in her studio, to meet Miss Besie Jordan, of Hendersonville, who was a fellow-traveler of Miss Pike on her trip to California last summer. A very delightful evening was spent. On Saturday, the Misses Edna and Edith Mann of Tryon, also fellow-travelers on the California trip arrived and the re-united quartette went hiking and autoing, accompanied by several of Miss Pike's Brevard friends, rounding out the day by going to a play. The ladies left on the afternoon train, Sunday, having enjoyed every moment of their visit.

Miss Baber spent the week-end at Greenville, S. C. Misses Poindexter and Long were guests of Miss Padgett at East Flat Rock for the week-end.

Mrs. J. H. McCoy, secretary of the Home Dept., of the Woman's Council of the M. E. Ch., So. with headquarters at Nashville, spent a short time at B. I. last week, looking after the various projects and improvements connected with recently acquired property. She was accompanied by Mr. Gardner, consulting architect, who will supervise all future plans.

Misses Smith and Lloyd chaperoned a large party of hikers, on Saturday, up King's Creek and further over the mountain.

MR STOWERS WRITES ON THE BONUS BILL

The fate of this bill, now before Congress, is watched with anxious hopes and fears by a great many people in this country. The business men whose profits may be affected are solidly against it, and in this they are supported by the Secretary of the Treasury, a multi-millionaire who can not picture the case of a man without money.

Then there are editors who are against it and who write touchingly concerning the beauty of dying for one's country, and how a man's patriotism becomes lowered when measured by dollars and cents.

This opposition, however, loses its force when you learn that they did none of the "dying for one's country," but rested in a bomb-proof position and made money.

The difficulty with all of these men who write so touchingly about patriotism is that they do not know the other side of the question. They do not, if ever come into contact with the men who need this help.

I would advocate the Bonus Bill, not on the ground that a man's patriotism should be rewarded, but upon the ground advanced by Senator Overman, that he should be in some measure compensated for the time lost out of his life, three years of the most critical period of his life, when habits are confirmed and professions chosen. While he stepped out of the college or out of his first beginning of business and spent three years in the demoralizing life of the camp, others remained at home, and occupied the positions that would have been his had he too remained there. There are thousands of young men who have never been able to regain their places in the struggle of life, and who are in sore need of some support till they can readjust themselves to the changed conditions. They are quiet and retiring and their voice is not heard in the streets, yet they need some help.

When one gets an insight into the needs of these worthy ex-soldiers, he finds it difficult to read with patience the sentimental prating about measuring patriotism by dollars and cents.

We are not uneasy about the future of the disabled soldier. The Government will care for him. We are especially concerned about the obscure soldier who came out uninjured. It is true, but without work, being left behind in the rush of business. He is the man who needs help—and the mere pittance of $500 will not take away his independence, but will help to tide over this temporary want.

It is true that it will require a great sum of money, but when these young men were sent into the field at $30.00 a month, while those who remained at home got fabulous wages no one thought of the cost then. The world was in danger, and the immense fortunes of the rich were in danger. They stood between the rich and ruin, and now they ask that the rich change places and stand between them and ruin.

Some one has defined gratitude to be a lively expectation of favors yet to come. In time of danger the present opponents of the bonus bill were full of gratitude and ready to promise anything to the boys but now that danger is past, with danger the gratitude has also disappeared.

MIDNIGHT MURDER

Copyright by The Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.

"WHEN the only thing you have to go on is the fact that several people in Grafton street recall having heard a cry a few nights ago, and the old man hasn't been seen since?"

"That's all, chief. If it weren't for the scream in the night—and they all agree that it was a blood-curdling cry—it would look like a plain case of disappearance. We've been all through the house, but of course we couldn't search it thoroughly without a regular warrant, and there's no ground for issuing one. Epstein may have wandered off somewhere to get away from his wife. She's a regular hellion, they say—though she was nice as pie to us."

John Kane, chief inspector of Scotland Yard, rubbed his chin thoughtfully.

"I'll take a run down to Grafton street myself as soon as I have gotten these reports out of the way," stated Kane. "In the meantime keep an eye on the house, and let me know if anything develops."

When Kane approached the house on Grafton street later in the evening, one of his men reported that there were indications of activity inside the place.

"Looks like they were getting ready to go away or something," said the operative. "There's a dray coming up now. Wouldn't be surprised if the woman, alarmed at our snooping around, is preparing for a getaway."

Kane said nothing, but edged closer to the house. From the meager information at his disposal, he was not at all inclined to credit the theory that a crime had been committed. But there would be no harm in looking things over, particularly if Mrs. Epstein was intending to move.

From the driver of the dray, Kane obtained the information that the luggage was to be taken to Charing Cross thence to be shipped across the channel. The tags were on the various articles, and it was not until the last piece was brought out of the house that Kane noted anything out of the ordinary. Then he motioned to his men to close in.

"Take that chest back into the house," he ordered. "Let's see what's in it!"

"What right have you to give such orders?" demanded a voice from the doorway, and the Scotland Yard man, looking up, caught a glimpse of a tall, gaunt woman glaring down at him from the threshold.

"The right of an officer of the crown to investigate suspicious circumstances," retorted Kane. "I happen to be the chief inspector of Scotland Yard, and, as your husband recently disappeared, I desire to know what is in that box."

It was in the dim, barely-furnished parlor of the house that Kane directed the chest to be placed. The flickering yellow light of a single gas jet cast a ghostly illumination over the scene, and even Kane's iron nerves were shocked when the lid of the box was thrown back, and what appeared to be a ghost sat up and leered out into the room! It was the body of the missing man, the upper portion of the trunk attached to the lid of the box in such a manner that, when the top was thrown back, the body sprang into a sitting posture, as if it were alive again.

Even Mrs. Epstein, hardened as she was, cried out at the apparition and then fainted away.

"Quick!" directed Kane. "Find out how the man was killed!"

"A thrust of some long, thin instrument through the heart," reported one of the detectives. "A drop of blood on his chest is the only indication of foul play, but that's what did it, all right. Not a stiletto or a dagger, though. The puncture isn't large enough for that."

The chief inspector examined the wound for a moment carefully, and then, stepping across to where the fainting woman lay, began to fumble with something in her hair.

"Throw some water in her face," he ordered, "and then stand back. I want to find out something before she gets a chance to recover her nerve."

As the woman's eyes opened, she became aware, first, of the body of her dead husband staring at her with sightless, accusing eyes. Then she saw the chief inspector, standing in front of her, examining under a pocket magnifying glass—something that shone and glittered in the light of the jet directly above it.

An instant later Kane stood over her, his finger indicating the thing he held in his hand.

"Why did you kill your husband at midnight, four days ago?" he demanded. "Yes, you did! There's no use denying it! We have witnesses who heard the scream. We have proof that you were alone in the house with him. We know that he had a considerable sum of money concealed on the premises and"—here his voice became the voice of doom—"I have here the weapon with which the murder was committed—your hatpin, with a tiny bit of the dead man's blood clogged close to the head where you neglected to wipe it off!"

Some one in the crowd, Mrs. Epstein was seen to whisper to the chief inspector for the first time since he had entered the house.

IF WOMEN ONLY KNEW

What a Heap of Happiness It Would Bring to Brevard Homes.

Hard to do housework with an aching back. Brings you hours of misery at leisure or at work.

If women only knew the cause—that Backache pains often come from weak kidneys.

'Twould save much needless woe. Doan's Kidney Pills are for weak kidneys. Ask your neighbor.

Read what a Brevard citizen says: Mrs. P. S. King says: "Some time ago I suffered terribly with kidney complaint. I don't know what brought on this trouble. I was nervous and had headaches and my kidneys didn't act right. I was in pretty bad shape. Hearing of Doan's Kidney Pills I began taking them and they gave me relief right away. Continued use made me feel better in every way."
