THE PRAYER CORNER

EDUCATION

I would share with my readers some "Thoughts on Education" from a noted educator, which I have enjoyed, I hope the graduating classes of Transylvania county and elsewhere will share them with us. I pray that they may be helped by them:

"Education seeks to make character vigorous without making it harsh or boisterous, patient without indifference, conscientious without being hypercritical, efficient without ostentatiousness, symmetrical and impressive, noble and self-reliant, but sympathetic with the less worthy, rich in itself, but without selfishness.

"The problem of Education is not to teach us how to make the bow of Ulysses—that how is made without difficulty, but it is to create men of strength and of self-restraint who can bend that bow.

"The problem is not so much to teach men how to get rich, although that may be important, but how to use riches after they are gained; how to save themselves from being crushed by its responsibilities, from being smothered by its soft pleasures or torn in pieces by its distractions.

"The problem is not how to get great honor, place, eminence, but how to bear the responsibilities which great honor always carries along with it.

"Education seeks to make the individual of resource, of the power of initiative, of honesty and honor, in whom the vision of truth is united with the power of doing ones duty, in whom tenderness of heart for the suffering is justly joined with capacity for moral indignations. It seeks to train leaders—intellectual, ethical, religious, civil. It also seeks to lift the whole level of the race to broader and clearer seeing, to finer thinking and nobler appreciation."

"The hardest school tasks are easily mastered in comparison with the lessons of patience, sweet temper, forgiveness, unselfishness, humility, purity, contentment. Even at the best we can learn these lessons but slowly.

A PRAYER FOR EDUCATION

O Thou Great Teacher, in whom alone are found the true sources of knowledge and wisdom, teach us that education seeks to make character, to make it vigorous, without making it harsh, or boisterous, patient, without indifference, conscientious without being hypercritical, symmetrical and impressive, noble and self-reliant, but sympathetic with the less worthy, rich in itself, but without selfishness.

Enable us to see that the problem of education is not so much to teach men how to get rich, but, how to use riches after they are gained, how to save ourselves from being crushed by its responsibilities; from being smothered by its soft pleasures; or torn in pieces by its distractions.

Show us that the problem is not how to get great honor, place, eminence, but how to bear the responsibilities which great honor always carries along with it.

Teach us that education seeks the source, of the power of initiative, of honesty and honor, in whom the vision of truth is united with the power of doing ones duty; in whom tenderness of heart for the suffering is justly joined with capacity for moral indignations; that it seeks to train intellectual, ethical, religious and civil leaders, and to lift the whole level of the race to broader and clearer seeing, to finer thinking and nobler appreciation.

Give us grace, above all things, to learn the lessons of patience, sweet temper, forgiveness, unselfishness, humility, purity, contentment, for the hardest school lessons are easily mastered in comparison with them. So shall we receive Thy "Well done." O Thou Great Teacher, in whom alone are found the true sources of knowledge and wisdom and hear at last the glad commendation, "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord," Amen.
