

LAW ENFORCEMENT SUBJECT OF GREAT INTEREST TO WOMEN

women a half century ago and later, through ceaseless efforts, self denial, courage and faith, were largely instrumental in bringing about a law to make illegal the sale of intoxicating beverages, so it is now right and fitting that women of this enlightened generation be instrumental in solving the problem of enforcing this law, as well as many other violated laws of the present day.

Enforcement of the prohibition law is just as necessary and vital today as was its enactment more than a decade ago. A law without enforcement is useless. No really thinking person, it would seem, could deny but that the 18th amendment in itself is a good, righteous and just law, as well as are the majority of other public laws.

Assuming that the prohibition law itself is not at fault, wherein then lies its difficulty and what part can women have in its enforcement?

The creation of public sentiment is perhaps the most effective and far-reaching all law enforcement mediums. Public sentiment which will put into power officers who will enforce the law—officers who are not AFRAID and are not tied hand and foot by political affiliations—such is the real keynote of law enforcement. As has been aptly stated, "It is the duty of every voter to educate public sentiment to the level of better law."

Have women since given the right to vote been true to their privilege and power in selecting the most capable and trust worthy officers and in using their influence to that end? Have they become sufficiently interested in politics during the past ten years to go to the polls and vote, but refuse to cast their ballot for the nominee who is known not only to violate the law himself but to uphold and encourage its violation by others? Until such state of affairs comes to pass can women expect to be found really loyal to their trust and to do their full duty as citizens and voters? As long as some women (it is not the intention to dignify them by the term ladies) degrade themselves to such a low estate as to partake of vile intoxicants and often actually become intoxicated, how can they expect to bring about a change in matters of law enforcement or even to preserve in any measure the high standards which the real American home should symbolize? No greater influence is exerted than that through sincere, untainted example.

These are pertinent questions and ones which bear a closer relation to the ultimate solution of law enforcement problems. Their proper answering will determine in large measure the wide-spread effectiveness of the movement.

No better slogan for improved conditions in public affairs could be adopted by women of today than the oft repeated one, "In union and organization is success." The fact that women years ago who toiled so faithfully and so unselfishly for abolishment of saloons were finally successful in their efforts, was due in part to their method of organization and systematic plan of work. Nation-wide organizations were effected, such as the Temperance Crusade, the Women's Christian Temperance Union and many others. Leaders in the movement secured the best leader of that day, and in fact of any day since that time, Frances E. Willard; they were united in their loyalty to their leader, a band of praying women who relied very largely on the success of their efforts to their confidence and belief in a just God to answer their prayers; they held mass meetings and organized anti-saloon campaigns; they induced saloon keepers, drinking men, children and young people, and prominent and influential leaders of the time to sign pledges against the sale and use of intoxicants; they wore little white ribbon badges of allegiance to their cause; they educated their children in the schools and in the homes on the evils of the drink habit; and in many other ways created a sentiment opposing the cursed of strong drink that in the end produced the effective results for which they were working.

A challenge now faces the women of 1931 to do and dare and trust as did these women in years gone by—a challenge to emulate the example of their forbears and adopt some or all of their methods of operation in an attempt to bring under control more thorough enforcement of the law laws now prevailing in practically every section throughout the nation. What more fitting and capable organization is prepared to answer the call of this challenge than local, state and national Business & Professional Women's Clubs? The urgent immediate call is for leadership, and what better band of nationally organized women could be found than among the rank and file of this internationally known women's organization? The first avenue of approach to success is by way of an attempt.

The women of today have it in their power, if they choose to use it, to fulfill the prophecy of a noted reformer, when he said regarding women and their work in the temperance movement, "They'll save us men if we give them half a chance."

CHAS. E. BURNHAM MUSICAL INST.

A prominent Musical Instructor whose studio is located at 20½ Wall Street in Asheville. Under his careful guidance many pupils of this school have attained prominence in their chosen field of endeavor. Countless others have been given a greater appreciation of what music really holds in store for them.

He offers an excellent opportunity in musical instruction and features individual training in music. He is greatly aiding in the development of culture in this section of the state—A studio that is under extremely able direction.

Mr. Burnham has formed a center for the devotees of the art and is a great aid in the promotion of music among the people of this part of the state.

It is necessary in these days of the radio, player piano and phonograph that the real art of music be not lost sight of and that the love listening does not supplant the love of production and thus throw us to mechanical music altogether. Music would lose its individuality and finally there would be no artists to reproduce for the multitude.

This well known instructor offers a complete course in musical education and offers individual instruction in all branches of music and thus paves the way for a complete individual training. Many have natural talents but they must be thoroughly cultivated for the greatest ultimate success.

He is a noted teacher of music and knows how to teach and his pupils make rapid strides to the front. He takes a personal interest in the aims, aspirations and talents of each and tries to advise them so that they will attain the greatest success. This has placed them in excellent professional positions, leaders in social affairs while some have become noted artists.

In this edition we compliment Mr. Burnham as one that is adding much to the happiness of the people of this section of the state and in placing music in the homes of the people where wholesome melody aids in the retaining of the old fireside spirit.

ENON FARMERS IN POTATO MEETING

(J. A. Glazener, Agri. Instructor)

At the meeting of farmers Monday evening, March 9, at Enon school house most of the time was devoted to the discussion of seed potatoes. It was shown by over 1000 tests distributed over the United States, that certified seed yielded around 45 bushels per acre more than ordinary seed that could not be certified. The results of 80000 tests over a period of 12 years conducted in the state of Pennsylvania showed an increase yield of 56 bushels per acre as compared with the non-certified seed.

The cause of potatoes running out proved to be an interesting study and discussion. This subject will be further discussed and illustrated by moving pictures in the early summer when the plants are in the growing stage.

At the meeting next Monday evening fertilizers will be one of the principal subjects for discussion and study. All farmers interested in potato growing are urged to be present and take part in these meetings. Your presence will add interest to the meetings and will help to build a greater community spirit.

Selica News Notes

We are wondering at this time if winter has just begun—anyway we are having some very cold wind and snow storms for two days.

We had an extra good attendance for the midweek community prayer service last week at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Barton. Those interested in the prayer services are very proud of the success of these meetings, which have been held in the majority of the homes in our community during the past five months. Only these services have been seriously hindered by adverse weather.

FARMERS FEDERATION, INC.

This wholesale produce market is located at 121 Roberts in Asheville.

This institution probably typifies greater than any other the material progress of the community and the fact that this section of the state is organized along twentieth century lines as regards the continued development of commerce and agriculture. Through the years they have been in business they have ever been most fair and honest in their negotiations and have afforded the public with a valuable market for the products they handle. It is very important the producers in the various lines should have a market that is up to the standard and we are fortunate in having such dealers.

The production of farm produce is a proposition that ought to appeal to every owner of a small farm, as it is a well known fact that this mode of farming builds up the land, at the same time making the producer more money than he can make by straight farming and then he gets paid right along in cash.

This firm is one of the leading industries. They employ a number of people who are all boosters. They have always taken an active interest in the good of the county and in everything that has aided in the betterment of local conditions, realizing that a larger city and community would be a benefit to the whole people. We wish to compliment the management upon the progressive and successful policies and to refer this establishment to all of our readers.
