

PROF. I. B. HAYNES DIED LAST SUNDAY

for him, and lived to see Tillman vindicate his course by founding Clemson and Winthrop colleges.

The educator was born July 9, 1850, at old Bivingsville, now Glendale, Spartanburg county, S. C. His father was a Methodist minister, the Rev. Hilliard Haynes, of near Lincolnton, N. C. His mother was Mrs. Sarah Lee Haynes, of Rutherford county. His brothers were Felix, Lee and Thorne. His sisters were Mildred, Medora, and Olivia. Six of the seven children were college graduates. He was prepared for college by a private teacher, Dr. Samuel Webber, and by Dr. Emory Watson, the father of Dr. Olin Watson, now educator, of Columbia, S. C. He then entered Wofford college at Spartanburg, receiving the degrees of A. B. and A. M. at the end of his course. He chose teaching as a profession after graduation. He did not do this as a mere marking-time for something else, but as a definite professional step, and his success sprang in part from his attitude.

Established School
After his first year in the mountains of Rutherford County, North Carolina, and after his graduation later, he established a private school at Paeolet, S. C., where he taught his younger brothers and sisters, as well as many who became prominent in Spartanburg annals—among them Dr. Sam Smith, Hamlet Lipscomb, William Burnett, and the daughters of Lipscomb Wood. The Paeolet people were so pleased with his work that they built a big schoolhouse for him, where he conducted a flourishing school for a number of years until the old firm of Walker, Evans, and Cogswell, of Charleston, S. C., secured his services.

While in Charleston, he married Janie Herbert, daughter of the Rev. T. G. Herbert, presiding elder of the South Carolina Conference. Shortly afterwards he was elected to the professorship of mathematics at Columbia Female college, Columbia, S. C.

Eight years later he was called to the presidency of the Leesville (S. C.) College, the first college in the South to include industrial self-support for students in its plans, and possibly the first to advocate coeducation. Among the prominent alumni of Leesville are Dr. James L. Mann, of Greenville, S. C. and the Rev. Arthur Gunter.

Aided Tillman
Professor Haynes made Leesville famous. It was while there that he cooperated with Tillman in the reorganization of education in South Carolina. The ideals of Lexington county were remodeled. The influence of the institution spread through the adjoining counties of Edgefield, Saluda, Newberry, and even over into Richland. Professor Haynes' work, and that of others in the private schools, eventually so promoted the cause of secondary education that it led the state to found public high schools, and so those old pioneers literally promoted themselves and many of their institutions out of existence when the state system got fully under way.

Then Professor Haynes was taken up by Ginn and company and he rounded out his early teaching with his work in the text book line.
In 1913, Professor Haynes, after the death of his first wife, went to Newberry county, where he found his second wife in Miss Jenn Adams, daughter of Thomas Hill Adams, a planter of that county. Miss Adams was a former pupil of his husband, and was also the first woman to graduate from the University of South Carolina. Professor and Mrs. Haynes then went to Meridian, Miss., where they taught together for a number of years, with a year at Columbia University, and then a change to the Alabama State Normal College at Livingston, where Mrs. Haynes was at the head of the English department for five years. He finally retired to his present home at Brevard in 1925.

Pioneer in Education
Professor Haynes was a pioneer in the field of industrial education. It is likely that Governor Tillman got many of his ideas from the Spartanburg educator, and Dr. D. B. Johnson of Winthrop College, profited by them also. He was one of the early champions of coeducation. He actually introduced it into his college, and lived to see it almost universally adopted.

He was an ardent prohibitionist. He introduced Frances E. Willard to her audience in South Carolina. He was a bold and uncompromising leader in every movement for political and civic progress. He was devoted to the cause of his church, the Methodist Episcopal, South, he supported the ministers, and was a tower of strength to the Sunday Schools whenever he was. In his devotion to the ideals of the old South he was one of the old school, although he was one of the builders of the new. Wearing a moustache and an imperial of a large massive tall frame, Professor Haynes looked like a Confederate brigadier and he had the qualities which made those men immortal. He taught in the Socratic way, with the type of solid instruction with which laid the foundations of the vast structure of today, but he always maintained that thoroughness in essentials, which was of greater importance than mere superficial extension. He was of a profoundly spiritual character, and his long life was adorned with the graces and virtues innate to his noble family as well as developed by a course of upright living in all the walks of life.

Professor Haynes' brother, Thorne, is well known in Western North Carolina. He was long distinguished in the U. S. Consular service, as well as having been an educator and scholar of note, besides being an accomplished author.

LOCAL MARINE SERVES MANY MILES FROM SEA

Hawthorne, Nev., April 22.—While U. S. Marines are usually found aboard battleships and cruisers, Walker Chapman, of Rosman, near Brevard, S. C., has one of the most unusual assignments ever given to a soldier of the sea. He is with a small group of Marines who are guarding the Naval Ammunition Depot here, more than 250 miles from the Pacific.

In the middle of the sand dunes stretching many miles in every direction, the Marines occupy a modern barracks. The only nearby body of water is a lake, where the men may enjoy swimming and boating. The nearest important town is Yerington, sixty miles away.

Despite their temporary isolation, a radio gives them contact with the outside world. They have movies nearly every night and the occasional post dances are attended by guests as far distant as Reno, 156 miles to the northwest. The Nevadans extend every hospitality to the guardians of this desert outpost.

Hawthorne was established as a naval station about six months ago. Chapman is 26 years old, was born in Rosman, and formerly made his home with his father, Gus E. Chapman, in that place. He joined the Marines in 1926, and for a while was stationed with the Sixth Regiment of Marines in China. In recent weeks he has been on duty on the West Coast, where he was selected as one of the first marines to guard this "naval base," far from the sea.

who resides in Brevard, are the following children: Mrs. C. M. McMullen, wife of the head of the school of Philosophy of Centre College, Kentucky; Mrs. James Barr, of Leesville, S. C.; Campbell Bryce Haynes, a prominent official of the Johns-Mansville company, New York, and Hilliard Galbraith Haynes, professor of mathematics in the Citadel Academy, Charleston, S. C. One daughter, Mrs. S. C. Morris, of Lake City, S. C., died last December. A daughter, of Mrs. Morris, Mrs. Robert P. Kinzey, lives in Brevard. All of Professor Haynes' children were teachers.
