THE FLOWER OF JUNE

"June can never be anything but sweet and lovely. The Flower of June would make that impossible. The rose! How full it is of mystic meaning! We westerners miss a world of Thought and Beauty which is open the Easterners. To the Orientals the flower world is as real as a world peopled with human beings." "In Eastern lands they talk in flowers. And they tell in a garland their love and their cares. Each blossom that blooms in their garden bows on its leaves a mystical language bears."

The English have caught the thought more or less in some of their flower names with their sacred things—They have the flowers of the Church, the Lent Lily, the Pink of Pentecost, the St. John Wort, the Harebell of St. George of England, and the Cowslip of St. Catherine of Sienna, The Madonna Lily and the Christian Rose. The rose, however, has a simpler, softer June meaning for us. It is one of those flowers which recall some lovely deed of Sainthood.

"Each flower is a written book, Recalling by memorial quaint, The holy deed of martyr'd saint."

What does the rose recall? If no special deed, it tells at least of one of the roots of sainthood. For the rose tells of reticence. Silence and sainthood, how often they go together.

It is said that one-third of the sin of the world is caused by sins of the tongue. And there is one special form of reticence suggested by the rose. It is found in the phrase, "sub rosa," such familiar Latin, that we have almost dropped it as English—"under the rose." In its old meaning the saying tells of things not to be repeated. Among the Ancients, the rose was dedicated to Harpocrates, the God of Silence, and was suspended over the tables in banqueting halls as a sign that the talk of the guests sitting underneath it—"under the rose"—was private.

The teaching is as obvious as it is necessary, for moderns as well as Ancients. And not in banqueting halls only must we live "sub rosa," though many a bitter jealousy and broken friendship would be avoided if things were not repeated after the party.

As in Smyrna, there is a street named the Street of Roses, because in it there are roses, roses all the way, the sub rosa life is to be believed everywhere—in public and in society, at work, on a holiday. It is a form of the hidden life, which June places before its clients. Verbum sac Sapienti.—A word to the wise is sufficient.

A PRAYER

Grant, O Lord, that I may be single-hearted in all I do, and say, and that I may ever speak as in Thy Presence. Help me so to train my faculties that I may be able to speak the exact truth, and grant that I may never swerve from it through a wish to give pleasure or to avoid disagreement, or through laziness, self-interest or prejudice.

Pardon, O Lord, I beseech Thee, my misuse of Thy most gracious gift of speech. Set a watch upon the door of my lips that I offend not with my tongue; that being careful to confess my own faults with penitence and not to publish my neighbor's failings with malice or derision, I may ever speak words of love and godliness.

Have mercy O God, upon those who are accustomed to speak harshly of their brethren, and grant that in all our judgments of others we may remember Thy Judgment whereby we exercise that charity whereby we shall ourselves be judged, and may hope to be forgiven.

We pray for those who love us, and for those who, it may be, dislike us. Take from us any evil thing that hinders the flow of love from soul to soul. Pour out upon us the Spirit of Brotherhood and Sisterhood, in the strength of which we may bear each other's burdens, and cover with a mantle of charity our brother's or sister's weakness.

If any are estranged from us do Thou pluck out of their hearts and ours any root of bitterness, and unite us again in the bonds of mutual affection. As we go among our fellows may we ever manifest a patient temper, a kind and happy spirit, a love that beareth all things, endureth all things, believeth all things. These blessings we ask in the Name of Jesus Christ Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.
