Five Outstanding Women

Mrs. J. J. Forbes, Sr. Shawboro, N. C.

Mrs. Annie C. Hay Maysville, N. C.

Mrs. J. F. McKnight China Grove, N. C.

Mrs. L. E. Barnes Henderson, N. C.

Mrs. Ed Peele Pikeville, N. C.

THESE five women, representing the rural homemakers of North Carolina, will comprise the fourth group to receive the title of Master Farm Homemaker conferred annually by THE FARMER'S WIFE, national farm women's magazine of St. Paul, Minn., in co-operation with the Home Demonstration Department of the State College of Agriculture.

Raleigh, N. C., July 15 (Special.) Because of their contributions to the welfare of rural North Carolina, five farm women will be given special recognition by State College on the night of July 29. These women are to receive the title of Master Farm Homemaker during a public ceremonial, as a special feature of the 29th annual session of the State Farmer's Convention.

This recognition idea is sponsored by The Farmer's Wife, national farm women's magazine of St. Paul, Minn., cooperating with the home demonstration department of the college. The women were selected by a special committee from a large list of nominees.

The women to be honored are Mrs. E. L. Peele of Pikeville, Wayne County; Mrs. J. J. Forbes, Sr., of Shawboro, Currituck County; Mrs. L. E. Barnes of Henderson, Vance County; Mrs. Annie C. Hay of Maysville, Jones County; and Mrs. J. F. McKnight of China Grove, Rowan County.

These five women are all good housekeepers, but housekeeping alone was not the basis upon which they were selected, says Mrs. Jane S. McKimmon, state home agent. The women selected answered satisfactorily more than 500 questions concerning the management of their homes, education and development of their children, community work, and the health records of their family.

To guard the health of her neighbors and of her own family, Mrs. McKnight promoted the draining of a swamp in her community, thus diminishing a mosquito menace. Mrs. McKnight is the mother of three daughters, one of whom is a home economics teacher, another is a primary teacher, and the third is a farm homemaker.

Selling on a curb market her home canned fruits and vegetables has earned for Mrs. Peele a net income of $840 a year. In spite of all the work marketing and canning requires, Mrs. Peele has found time to take an active part in community affairs. She has four daughters and two step-daughters.

"If a home may be judged by the type of children reared in it, then Mrs. Forbes' home is of the highest order" writes a neighbor in nominating Mrs. Forbes for Master Farm Homemaker recognition. Mrs. Forbes has a family of eight, six daughters and two sons. Following their mother's example these children are now leaders in the communities in which they live.

A widow since 1917 when the youngest of her six children was only eight years old, and the oldest was 20, Mrs. Hay has had to spend much of her time managing the 400-acre farm which she owns. She has managed so well that she has made it possible for four of her children to receive college training.

Even though the oldest member of her family of five is only 15 years old, Mrs. Barnes finds a great deal of time for community work. She is a member of five church and social organizations and an officer in each of them. Because she had no opportunity to attend school after she had been graduated from the eighth grade, she is now taking the course in foods and nutrition offered by the home demonstration department.

ELIMINATED

At a recent society wedding, so great was the throng and so badly organized the arrangements that one of the guests said to a young gentleman in tails and spats.

"Excuse me, sir, but are you the bridegroom?"

"No, sir," replied the young gentleman, "I was eliminated in the semi-finals."

"Boss, will you give me about a dollar. Our pastor is done gwine away and we all wants to give him a little momentum."
