

240 BUSHELS OF POTATOES TO ACRE

By J. F. CORBIN
W. J. Raines, of Lake Toxaway, made 240 bushels of potatoes per acre on his 1930 crop. Mr. Raines is very particular about his seed potatoes, always selecting them in the field at digging time. He does not know the name of his potatoes—but he knows his potatoes. He has not bought any new seed and kept them for seed for 35 years. He thinks that the source of his seed came from two potatoes that his brother sent here from the State of Washington 35 years ago.

Mr. Raines' field last year measured 44 yards square, rows 3 feet apart and hills 14 inches apart. The land was poorly prepared, growing corn the previous year. He used Royster Potato fertilizer, 600 pounds, under the field, or at the rate of 1500 pounds per acre. The patch produced 96 bushels of potatoes, or 240 bushels per acre. The potatoes were planted the last of March and one-half the patch was badly frost bitten last night of May, but he could not tell any difference in the yield of frost bitten potatoes and the others. They were blooming when frost came, too.

Mr. Raines believes in experimenting and finding out the best way to do things and then doing them that way. He left one row through the patch without any fertilizer, 44 yards long, and made one and one-half bushels less potatoes on it than other rows. This figures 137 1-2 bushels less per acre.

I am not writing this for Royster Fertilizer company, for any other standard brand would have done the same thing for Mr. Raines. Mr. Raines has built up a potato seed business in his community for himself, selling all his seed at good prices at his home. He has a beautiful field of potatoes this year.
