"MAKE IT KNOWN"

When the cave man started drawing On his little bits of bone, He was telling someone something; He was making something known. And it's rather more than likely He was trying to arrange To dispose of, say a stone axe And get something in exchange.

When the next man started writing On his little bits of clay, He was dashing up the story In a different kind of way. And it's rather more than likely He was trying to describe The advantage of dealing With a member of his tribe.

They were elementary people With an elementary plan, But they laid a good foundation For the modern business man: And it's rather more than likely, If you try the self-same way, You'll be selling out tomorrow What you advertise today.
