A farmer was passing an insane asylum with a load of fertilizer. An inmate called through the fence, "What are you hauling?"

"Fertilizer," replied the farmer.

"What are you going to do with it?"

"Put it on my strawberries," reported the farmer.

The inmate countered quickly: "You ought to live here. We get cream on ours."

Jack—Dad, what are ancestors?

Dad—Well, my boy, I'm one of your ancestors. Your grandfather is another.

Jack—Then why do people brag about them?

PLANNING TO HOLD MANY CONFERENCES

Instead of the usual agricultural extension conference which is held each winter at State College, a series of nine sectional conferences will be held in December and January to which prominent farmers and educators will be invited.

"This new plan of extension meeting will seek to develop programs of agricultural advancement by sections and will aid the college workers in determining the needs of each section and work to that end," says Dean I. O. Schaub in announcing the new type of conference. "Each county home and farm agent will attend the conference for his community and will invite at least two good farmers and two leading farm women from each county to participate in the discussions. We shall have a representation present from each of the departments in the school of agriculture at State College and especially will we discuss the outlook for 1932. After that, committees will be organized to pass upon recommendations for the coming year. These committee reports will be fully discussed before adoption."

Mr. Schaub said that the nine conferences would last two days each and would be held as follows: Wilmington, December 1 and 2; New Bern December 3 and 4; Edenton, December 8 and 9; Rocky Mount, December 10 and 11; Asheville, December 14 and 15; Statesville, December 16 and 17; Durham, January 5 and 6; Fayetteville, January 7 and 8, and Winston-Salem, January 13 and 14.

One of the important things to be studied will be ways and means of decreasing the cotton acreage next season by 500,000 acres and the other so-called cash crops in like proportion. What should take the place of these crops will be another important matter to be decided upon by the conference.

In many cities and towns throughout the country there is a commendable movement on foot to do away with the old method of disposing of the leaves which cover lawns and gardens during the fall.

The customary practice of burning creates a vicious smoke nuisance which is objected to by even the most fair-minded citizen. Often the leaves are raked into the street gutters to be burned. While this is a reasonable place from the standpoint of fire hazard, it may be quite destructive to the pavement. Especially is this true if the street is paved with crushed stone bound together with a tar or asphaltic material. The damage is evidenced in later months by a crumbling or disintegration of the street surface.

A useful method of disposal which is meeting with almost universal approval is to compost the leaves. This is easily done by piling alternate layers of leaves and dirt on the ground or in a rough wooden box of suitable size.
