D. A. R. PROGRAM DRAWS BIG CROWD

The two hundredth birthday anniversary of George Washington was fittingly celebrated at the Transylvania County court house Monday afternoon under the auspices of the Daughters of the American Revolution, Waightstill Avery Chapter.

Mrs. J. S. Silverstein, regent of the local chapter, presided at the meeting before the large audience that packed the court house to the limit of its capacity.

Following the Processional of Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts and seventh grade pupils of the Brevard Grammar School and Brevard Institute, Rev. R. L. Alexander, pastor of the Brevard Presbyterian church, led in prayer. Jane Pearce, troop II, Girl Scouts, led the Scout troops and the D. A. R. members in Allegiance to the Flag.

In the first address of the program, Prof. J. B. Jones, county superintendent, spoke on "George Washington as a Teacher." Mr. Jones declared that Washington taught not so much by precept as by example.

After two selections of orchestra music played by Dorothy Everett, Jerry Payne, J. M. Allison, Jr., L. E. Brown, Elizabeth Allison, Pio Sanchez, Richard Grimshaw, John Carval and Mrs. J. M. Allison, Mayor Ralph Ramsey began his address.

At the conclusion of Mr. Ramsey's address the assembly sang "America." The procession marched out of the court house and to the hemlock tree on the court house lawn where the D. A. R.'s dedicated the tree to the commemoration of our first president.

ESSAY ON GEORGE WASHINGTON

Sandy McLeod, son of Mr. and Mrs. Hinton McLeod and an honor student of the Freshman class in the Brevard High school, has written an interesting essay on the life of George Washington.

Sandy portrays in his article many of the characteristics of this great man and the essay will be of interest to Brevard News readers at this time when citizens all over the United States and many foreign countries are celebrating the 200th birthday anniversary of George Washington.

Since this February twenty-second is the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Washington, it seems appropriate for the boys and girls to study his life, and try to live like him.

On February twenty-second, seventeen hundred and thirty-two, the man who led the colonies to unite under one flag was born on a farm in Westmoreland county, Virginia. He received most of his training from his mother, Mary Ball Washington, since his father died while he was still very young.

Washington first begins to stand out before us in 1748, when he was sixteen years old, and went into the western country on a surveying trip with his friend, Lord Fairfax, whose patronage at all times meant much to him.

While a boy he was always jumping, running, and throwing. It has been said that he was the only person who could throw a rock across the Potomac River. He held the broad-jump record at twenty-three feet until only a few years ago.

It is easy to say that Washington was the heart of the Revolution. Had it not been for him, the course of history might have been changed, and the United States might have died in its infancy.

After the Revolutionary War he retired to his home at Mount Vernon. Soon after this the convention of 1787, of which he was a member, founded the present Federal Constitution.

When Washington was twenty-two years old he was selected by Governor Dinwiddie of Virginia to go into the wilderness and warn the approaching French that they must not approach too far.

While he was at home England prepared for military operations in America, and he was once more called into the service of his country.

The latter is one of the most famous and has had many books written about it, the following views of Washington were taken from "The Boys of '76" by Charles C. Coffin, who personally followed every footprint of the Continental armies.

to those who knew, which made it difficult for the other officers. The campaign against the French and Indians was soon brought to an end by the capture of Fort Duquesne.

His marriage with Mrs. Custis took place shortly after his return. It was celebrated amid a joyous assemblage of relatives and friends.

Although politics and warfare tempted him, he could not altogether accommodate himself to those who were in power; therefore he remained a simple Virginia planter until after he was forty years old.

Meantime, America was gradually breaking away from the mother country. As the stages of the conflict developed, Washington began to realize that there was danger of a permanent separation.

On June 15, 1775, at the urgent request of John Adams, Washington was offered by Congress the command of the American Army, and accepted it.

The main reason of Washington's victory in Boston was that the British were divided and General Howe was thinking more of amusement than of fighting.

When George Washington was quite a small boy his father gave him a hatchet. It was bright and new, and George took great delight in going about and chopping things with it.

George had often seen his father's men chop down the great trees in the forest, and he thought that it would be fine sport to see this tree fall with a crash to the ground.

"Who has been cutting my fine young cherry tree?" he cried. "It was the only tree of its kind in this country, and it cost me a great deal of money."

DID GEORGE REALLY CUT DOWN THAT CHERRY TREE?

In the latter days a kindly feeling concerning trees and forests has spread through the land and makes us humane in regard to the living things of the forest.

GEORGE WASHINGTON AND HIS HATCHET

(Merle Michael)

When George Washington was quite a small boy his father gave him a hatchet. It was bright and new, and George took great delight in going about and chopping things with it.

George had often seen his father's men chop down the great trees in the forest, and he thought that it would be fine sport to see this tree fall with a crash to the ground.

"Who has been cutting my fine young cherry tree?" he cried. "It was the only tree of its kind in this country, and it cost me a great deal of money."

"Father!" cried little George, "I will tell you the truth about it. I chopped the tree down with my hatchet. His father forgot his anger."

"George," he said, and took the little fellow in his arms. "George, I am glad that you told me about it. I would rather lose a dozen cherry trees than that you should tell one falsehood."
