NAMING MRS. JUSTUS TO SUCCEED LATE HUSBAND.

No action of county officials in all past years ever received more general approval than that act this week in naming Mrs. George M. Justus to succeed her late husband as county treasurer, to fill out the unexpired term. Precedent for such action has been established in many counties, states, and even in national offices. In fact, there was nothing else that could be done, under the circumstances, that would have been approved by the people.

Mr. Justus was given the place in unusual manner. In the primary two years ago he failed of nomination, and H. C. Aiken, the successful candidate in the primary, withdrew in favor of Mr. Justus, because the latter had been in ill health for many years. That illness had not been removed, but lingered on, with attendant increasing expenses attached to the household. Then, when the weaker man finally succumbed, the family needed the income from the office even more than ever before. Mrs. Justus is well qualified to perform the small amount of work that the office requires, and the salary will be a real blessing to the widow and orphaned children.

It was fitting and proper that she be named to the post, and the county officials who gave the appointment to Mrs. Justus are to be commended for resisting the campaigns waged for appointment of others, and, following the dictates of their own consciences, gave the place to the woman who has borne the brunt of the battle during the long years of illness suffered by her late husband.

TRANSYLVANIA COUNTY'S GREATEST OPPORTUNITY.

Figures given out from the United States Bureau of Census shows that there are more fishermen and hunters than there are baseball fans, football fans, golf fiends or tennis sports. That statement might be passed over lightly by people in most sections of the United States, but it is a most significant statement for the citizens of Transylvania county and other counties in Western North Carolina.

The actual figures show that there were 2,426,373 baseball fans in 1930, and 1,218,164 football admissions in the same year, with 908,640 golf fiends paying green fees, and 363,465 tennis players.

But look at this:

There were 4,420,876 men and women paying fishing and hunting license in that same year—more by far than all other major sports advocates combined!

Transylvania county, with intelligent and devoted treatment of its fishing streams and hunting grounds, could soon be receiving a great income of cash money. With its hundreds of miles of mountain streams, and its tens of thousands of acres of forest lands, this county could attract a great amount of that four and one-half million of fishermen and hunters each year.

It is a known fact that fishermen and hunters will spend more money, and spend it more freely, than any other sportsmen on earth. High admission fees to see baseball games, or football games, or a willingness to turn loose to see or play golf, are piker things compared to the crazy spending of a fool fisherman or a crazy hunter.

If the man in this county who owns land through which a stream passes would devote one-tenth as much time to stocking his stream with trout, and tending them as he does to his corn field, he could take in ten times more from his stream than he can get from his cornfield. Both the state and federal governments are ready and anxious to give to any man any amount of young fish necessary to stock his streams.

We suggest to the Chamber of Commerce that definite attention be paid to this phase of our county's natural resources, and development of our forests and streams be one of the objectives of the commerce body.

Mr. Randall W. Everett has long been urging the community to capitalize upon this great natural gift. He knows how freely men spend money for the privilege of fishing and hunting—providing there are fish and game in the vicinity.

THERE IS HAPPINESS, IF PEOPLE WOULD EARN IT.

Obedience to that great command uttered one day some two thousand years ago, when people were told to bear one another's burdens, would remove most of the human ills in any community. Every man has his burdens to bear today, and they are heavy, indeed. Instead of doing as we are told to do in this matter, and bear one another's burdens, isn't it a fact that we do the very opposite, in many instances, and add to one another's burdens instead of bearing them and sharing them?

There are but few men in any community today that are free from the terrifying thought of failure. His business is about gone, or his income from his professional work is insufficient, or his farm products are not bringing sufficient money with which to carry on, or he is not getting regular employment or any employment at all, his wages have been reduced to the minimum. Even those we looked upon as being rich are suffering, because their stocks and bonds are not bringing in the returns that once enabled them to live in ease and comfort. Not a man, perhaps, has escaped the penalty of the times, in this country or in any other country throughout the world.

As a result of this pinch that is felt by everyone, each man takes his accounts that he holds against the other fellows, and starts out with them, or turns them over to a lawyer, for collection. At the same time this same fellow is bothered to death with collectors from the houses that he owes. And so it goes, from one to another, all day long, every day. Night comes, and with it a greater, more depressing, restless, sleepless night than the horrible one that preceded it. Morning comes, and the grind of the daily rounds starts all over again.

Wonder if the application of the spirit of that injunction to bear one another's burdens would be of any help? Wonder if there is anything in the commands and promises of the Book? Wonder why we pay so little attention to these commands and promises? Wonder if our attitude is not responsible for much of the ills we are suffering?

The United States government, with the governments of Europe agreed, all of them, to call a halt for a while on this practice of one pressing another for debts, in order that each might have time to do some constructive work in re-building a fund from which the debts might be paid. If all of us would agree to bother the other man just as little as possible, do you not believe that all of us would be materially helped?

THE PRAYER CORNER

From The Files Of Long Ago

THE TEACHER AND THE CHILDREN

We can imagine the tender Savior watching the children at their games in the market place at Jerusalem. He took an interest in the antics of these little mimics as they played at weddings and funerals. (Matt. 11:17, Luke 7:32.)

No wonder that they loved and followed One who could sympathize with them, even in their play. Consequently we find that when the 5,000 men followed Jesus Christ round to the other side of the Lake of Galilee, and remained with Him for three days, there were little children there too. The Evangelist did not trouble to count them, because he regarded them as of little importance, but he mentions their presence (Matt. 14:21). Children counted in the estimate of the Savior however, (Matt. 18:14 Mark 10:5.)

Yes, children were His most promising pupils. After lamenting over the unbelief of Corazin and Bethsaida, where most of His mighty works had been done, He lifted His face to Heaven and cried (Matt. 11:25.)

And so to the very end of His ministry it was the children who responded to His teaching. On Palm Sunday when the grey-bearded theologians from the Sacred City, came up with shocked and annoyed faces, and drew His attention to the fact that the children were crying out before Him (Matt. 21:16.)

The lesson which Jesus Christ taught the disciples of old is one of the first that teachers should learn, if they would obey the Master's command: Suffer the little children to come unto me. We must believe in these little ones, who impose such confidence in us, their instructors. It is only when we realize what wonders can be wrought with this most promising of materials (the soul of a child) that we are able to achieve marvels.

(Be sure and look up the references.)

A PRAYER FOR THE TEACHER AND CHILDREN

O Thou great lover of children, who dearly loved to see them at work and at play, and whose most promising pupils they were, of whom He said: "Whatsoever shall not receive it shall not enter therein"—Bring home to the minds and hearts of our teachers the lesson which Thou didst teach Thy disciples of old, one of the first that teachers should learn, if they would obey the Master's command: "Suffer the little children to come unto me," and which is as applicable to the day schools as to the Sunday Schools, that they must believe in their pupils who impose such confidence in them, their instructors.

Open their eyes that they may see what wonders can be wrought with mind of a child. Grant to them Thy mind and Thy heart, so shall Thy that most promising of materials, the blessing rest upon them, and upon their work and the fruit of their labors shall be peace and enjoyment forever, with gladness of heart here and the joy of their Lord hereafter. We ask it in His name, Amen.
