The man who lives in a town of 100,000 population wonders what the fellow in the town of 10,000 population finds to amuse himself and the fellow in a town of 10,000 population wonders what a man in the town of 1000 population finds to amuse himself, and so on down the line. It isn't the size of the town, or the house that a man lives in that makes him happy, it is his attitude of mind towards his surroundings, and the attitude of his heart. Many times the man in the small town and in the little house is the happier of the two.—EXC.
