

New Drug May Be Answer In Curing Common Colds

LONDON—It's still too soon to say, but a new drug has been found that may be the answer to that universal malady, the common cold. British physicians aren't sure how sure-fire it is but they think it has possibilities.

It's called patulin, sort of sister to penicillin. Both come from the same family, mould. The official publication of the British Medical Association describes it as a colorless, crystalline substance, but before you can get it at the corner drug store, you'll have to wait until more tests are made to determine its curative power.

Here's how it came to be discovered as a possible cold-killer. Professor W. E. Gye, director of the Imperial Cancer Research Fund, was in bed with a cold, sniffles and all. Some patulin was sent him, but for cancer experimentation. Knowing how it kills bacteria, Professor Gye decided to become a guinea pig. He tried patulin on himself. Next morning, he says, he was fit and back at work.

So early last winter, patulin was tried at a naval establishment. Fifty per cent of the cases tested with patulin recovered completely from colds and within 48 hours.

The British medical publication says that unlike penicillin, patulin is easy and inexpensive to produce.

ALLIES MOVE IN ON TREASURY ISLAND

WITH BARGES beached within a few feet of the rocky shore, New Zealanders, part of the invasion force that wrested Treasury Island from the Japanese, bring ashore battle supplies. There was little resistance and the enemy was driven to the hills. The taking of this base imperils the southern approach to Bougainville Island, last important Jap base in the Solomons, on which U. S. Marines have landed. (International)
