LOTS OF INTEREST SHOWN IN SOLDIER VOTE LAW

RALEIGH—Almost every day some newspaper or State official beyond the borders of North Carolina calls for information on this State's soldier voting law. The Secretary of State Thursday had a request from The New York Post for a brief summary of N. C. provisions, together with whatever comment he cared to make. Secretary Eure responded with the statement that this State has gone as far as any other, and farther than Congress can possibly go in providing opportunity for soldier vote. Under the Federal Constitution Congress cannot prescribe rules for primaries, and there is grave doubt in minds of many good lawyers whether it can set up or change requirements for voting in the general election. Whatever happens in this soldier voting business, the number of requests for data on our State law indicates a very lively interest on part of newspapers throughout the country.
