Exotic Soup the Cubans Like
By ALICE DENHOFF

OUR canned soups are wonderful, but, even as good as they are, once in a while there is the urge to experiment with something different, something new, something with another flavor.

Favorite Soup
While in Havana we enjoyed a favorite soup, one that is frequently served at home and at good restaurants. Cover bottom of a large soup tureen with thin slices of freshly-toasted bread. Over the toast spread a thin layer of finely chopped onions mixed with a layer of grated parsley. Sprinkle a layer of grated cheese over the onions. Have enough stock heating to fill tureen to the brim, add a few spoonfuls of it to 1/2 c. toasted and ground almonds or filberts; mix to a paste. When stock boils, add paste and stir until well blended. Drop in a few tiny sticks of cinnamon, and pour over contents of tureen. A nice dish when you want to serve something different and exotic, yet not expensive!
