JACKSON FARM HINTS

Why Grow

Expensive Corn?

If you gathered less than 50 bushels of corn from each acre of your corn field last year, you did not get decent pay for your labor and the use of your land. North Carolina farmers have increased their acreage corn yield by more than 10 bushels per acre during the past 10 years. Jackson County farmers have harvested yields of more than 100 bushels per acre. These increased yields have been made possible by making use of the five accepted improved production steps which will mean higher yields on Jackson County farms. The steps are as follows:

FIRST: Plant a producing seed. Adapted hybrids can be expected to increase the yield by at least 10 bushels per acre. The most widely accepted hybrid for this County is yellow hybrid U. S. 282, also W. Va. hybrid 1163 has proven good at higher elevations. Hybrid Dixie 17 yields well but lacks stalk strength. U. S. 282 seed is scarce this year. Adapted hybrids are highly recommended, but select a good yielding open-pollinated variety in preference to a questioned hybrid.

SECOND: Fertilize correctly. 300 lbs. to 400 lbs. of 6-8-6 or 7-7-7 per acre is recommended. The nitrogen, indicated by the first figure on the bag, is the important part of the corn fertilizer. Heavier applications of low nitrogen fertilizer are needed. Do not place the seed in contact with fertilizer in the row.

THIRD: Provide a good stand. Plants standing 15 inches apart in 42 inch (3½ feet) rows will produce good yields if properly fertilized and cultivated.

FOURTH: Avoid late or deep cultivation. Control weeds by shallow cultivation before corn is large. The section harrow or weeder will kill most of the weeds if used frequently before corn germinates (comes up) and until plants are three to four inches tall. Leave field clean of weeds by shallow cultivation and stop cultivating at not more than waist high.

FIFTH: Top-dress with nitrogen for desired yield. Add top-dressing before the corn is more than knee high. Two pounds of available nitrogen may be expected to increase the yield by one bushel

Card of Thanks

I wish to thank my friends for the sympathy and acts of kindness and help during my recent bereavement. Also for the beautiful floral offerings.

if applied early. Three to four bags of nitrate of soda or one to two bags of Ammonium Nitrate per acre as top-dressing will pay good dividends on the corn crop.
