STATE COLLEGE HINTS TO FARM HOME-MAKERS

Keeping the house dry in hot, humid weather and thus preventing mildew and mustiness, has become easier in the last few years, according to agricultural engineers. Improved electric fans, designed for special purposes, help keep the house better ventilated and thus aid against mildew. Among these are the new adjustable window fans which are made to fit into windows of various shapes and

The group will arrive at Southampton August 30 and will visit London, Brussels, the Hague, and Amsterdam prior to arriving in Copenhagen on September 9. During the week of the conference, the delegation will be provided with a half-day tour of Copenhagen and a full day excursion to Fredenborg Castle, the Hamlet Castle in Elsinore, and the Island of Sealand with a visit to Fredericksborg Castle.

sizes. Among the chemicals used for drying air are silica gel and activated alumina which absorb moisture—that is, take up moisture from the air and hold it instead of dripping. These are put out in various types of containers, including cloth bags which may be hung in clothes closets. When they have taken up all the moisture they can hold, they may be dried out in a slow oven and used again.

Calcium chloride has long been used to absorb moisture. As this chemical takes up moisture from the air, it liquefies and then must be replaced with a fresh dry supply. It may be put in a cloth bag with a container underneath to catch its drippings, or may be spread on copper wire over a container. The container should be enamelware, glass or some material which will not rust.

Enrollment in 4-H Clubs in North Carolina last year exceeded that of any other State.

Mrs. Gregory, Mrs. Cuyler, and Mrs. McCormick will go on a tour through Central Europe, Italy, and France, and will sail for home from LeHavre on October 13.

Some 23 countries will be represented at the meeting. The United States delegation will be headed by Mrs. W. E. Nichols of Kentucky, vice-chairman of the Country Women's Council, U. S. A., which will meet in Copenhagen at the same time as the Associated Country Women of the World.
