Your Child And The School

By Miss Lucille Hunt

The sixth year is one of transition between the home and the school, between the life of a child protected by the home and that of a first-grader, who must meet the often rigorous demands and competition of school life. Many factors combine to determine the nature of the child's adjustment to this new environment, but the two probably of greatest importance are his patterns of individual growth and the kind of home experience he has had.

Progress in physical development is uneven, but by six the child has usually lost most of his baby contours. His legs lengthen and there are gains in both height and weight. While the child's body is gradually changing in shape so, too, is his face. The jaw, long, is a permanent teeth replace baby teeth and as new molars come in.

The organs and framework of the six-year old's body are growing and changing even though this development is not easily observed. The heart is still in a period of rapid growth, but the brain has almost achieved its full weight. During the sixth year eyes are not yet mature in either size or shape, and their shallow depth probably accounts for a tendency toward far-sightedness. This defect is corrected naturally when, some time between eight and ten, the child's eyes attain adult size and shape. Although eye and hand preferences are well established, a six-year-old still finds coordination of eye and hand movements difficult. Muscular development is also uneven and, in general, large muscles are more advanced than are small ones. Precise movements are therefore a matter of considerable effort and strain for him.

Six-year-olds enjoy using their hands. Although they like to try to make things they are still clumsy and cannot be expected to produce perfect products. Even if their skills were greater their relatively short periods of interest would make it hard to carry an activity through to a conclusion. Their work will be crude but creative efforts should not be discouraged by placing all the emphasis on perfection. Since the small muscles of the arm and hands are not completely developed, it is still hard for many children to cut well or to do handwork that involves much skill or control. Children vary considerably in this sort of physical maturity.

At this age the child has difficulty making decisions and because his interest span is short we often wonder about decisions that were made. He is more interested in the group activities than the five year old. There is a beginning of interest differences in boys and girls. This age enjoys group dramatics. He would rather act a story than tell one.

At this age there are some very special needs which include encouragement, a great deal of praise, warmth, and a patience from adults. He needs ample opportunity for exercise, especially of the kind that uses the large muscles. He should have wise supervision with a minimum of interference by adults. He needs some responsibility, though without pressure, and without being required to make decisions and choices or to achieve rigidly set standards. Under no conditions should he be pressured about school grades and achievements. Certainly there should be no comparisons of his work with his playmates or with others of his family.

At this age each one wants to win and finds it hard to lose. He should be taught to accept defeat without a grudge and success without a swagger. His play is rough and tumble and often interferes with the little girls because they are beginning to play house. If possible their play should be coordinated so each can play without interference from the other. The little girls should be allowed to play dress-up in grown-ups clothes and play freely without interference. This kind of play

Better Buy Buick!

If that car of yours has put its best days behind it, there's no time like right now to think about starting out afresh with a taut, new, up-to-the-minute motorcar with all its mileage still in it.

And there's no better place in the world to start than with the beauty pictured here, for a variety of reasons.

For one thing, this Buick SPECIAL is a quick-stepping Fireball valve-in-head straight-eight that's priced lower than some sixes.

For another, it's built with typical Buick ruggedness through and through — a husky that can take a lot of years without crying "Uncle!"

Then, too — this high-styled beauty is proving to be one of the most economical Buicks ever built — easy on gas, easy on upkeep, easy on you in its soft, floating, light-handling comfort.

It even comes with Dynaflo "Drive" if you like — and Dynaflo means that you will never have to service or replace a friction clutch, and that rear-end or transmission servicing — even engine upkeep — are cut to a minimum.

*Standard on ROADMASTER optional at extra cost on SUPER and SPECIAL models.

Of course, you can't see all of this in the brief span of a trial drive.

But you can experience the good solid feel of Buick strength beneath you. You can satisfy yourself on the lightness of the controls, the utter smoothness of Dynaflo, the quick surge of Buick's Fireball power.

All such things will tell you that this is a car you'll be glad to live with for a long time to come — and you need only to ask your Buick dealer for a demonstration to see precisely what we mean.

Why not call on him soon to talk about signing up?
