Good Brushes Deserve Good Care

The picture on the right is a graphic view of what happens when the home-painter forgets to clean a paint brush after that Fall painting job. Whether it's one of the new nylon-bristled paint brushes, or an ordinary hog bristle, failure to take a few simple cleaning steps will result in serious damage to the brush. The nylon brush above has been given the proper cleaning care which allowed the bristles to snap back into normal, efficient condition. Incidentally, nylon paint brushes can be "recovered" from just about any ordinary mis-use, due to the superior qualities of this product. Simply boil the bristles in hot water for 30 minutes, shape it, and hang it up to dry. It will be as good as new in the morning.
