FOLEY'S URINO LAXATIVE

Forest Fires And The Game Supply

The statement that forest fires destroy much game has always been made, but definite information to prove this point has been lacking. It is an indisputable fact that game becomes less abundant with each recurring fire, but just what kind, and number, of game perish is unknown. An opportunity was afforded in the Spring of 1920 to get information on this source of destruction to the wild game.

The Spring of 1920 was very dry. Many large forest fires occurred in Pennsylvania. One such fire started on June 1, five miles south of Medix Run, Pa. in the heart of an unexcelled deer country. The men fighting this fire under the direction of the Forester, Chas. E. Zerby rescued three new-born fawns from the fire near their camp. These fawns could hardly stand and would surely have perished had not their blats been heard by the fire fighters above the roar and crackle of the flames. All three fawns were male deer. From this rescue occurring on a limited area near camp it was estimated that fully 100 or more fawns perished within the 5300 acre sweep of the fire. The adult deer could, of course, escape. It was predicted at this time that a shortage of legal deer killed would be noticed in the season of 1921, at which time these fawns would be spike-bucks. Such was the case. In conferring with the Traveling Game Protector, Mr. Wm. C. Kelly of DuBois, Pa., he informed me that while the deer killed in the vicinity of the fire showed an increase over past years, yet this increase was not in keeping with that of the surrounding regions. The shortage of spike-bucks was particularly noticeable.

Very few of the smaller game animals escaped. This area being a blackened waste the protective coloration of the rabbits and ruffed grouse made them easily discernible. Only one disheveled rabbit and a grouse hen with a lonely chick were seen during the summer following the fire. Immediately after the fire female deer could be seen searching for their fawns over the blackened ground. One such deer whose fawn we had saved, scenting her offspring, came close to camp. But when we carried the fawn to her she would run away, the fawn following us back to camp as tame as a kitten.

Pennsylvania has built up a great hunting ground. Under wise protection the game is increasing rapidly. There are only two things that can remove the game. The first is to repeal all game laws and the second is forest fires. There is little danger of the game becoming extinct from either cause if the State continues in its present policy. The tools and equipment that would have stopped that fire of 1920 has been supplied by the Department of Forestry together with other advances in forest protection. But it remains with the individual to use great care while in the woods. A fire causes enormous damage to timber and game. We can't be too careful. Prevent Forest Fires—It Pays.
