

What Does Real Joy Come From?

We wonder if the readers of the News-Record have ever sat down and thought for a little time and tried to find out what in their life has brought them the greatest joy? We imagine it would be as varied the answer as the persons. We talk of joy rides, a boose joy, joy in some other things but did we sit down and really thought the matter out we would find that these things have not brought us the greatest joy but that they have had some alloy. The great sources of joy and pleasure are not the material things that are around us, the labor or the money or house or store room or farm. It is something that may be the result of these but are not due to these. It is something that is more the intangible and comes from senses or parts of our nature which man and the other may enable us to see more of but without the material things we have them at our command and the poorest and lowliest can find them if they but seek for them. Education is one of the things which brings great enjoyment. Spiritual culture is one of them. The poor man may have the love of the family and even in adversity can feel that he has more than in prosperity. Many a palace has less than the hovel. It is an inner source and all the material things cannot take it away from us. Art in many forms gives us joy and we reach into unknown regions and see the things that enrapture the mind and soul. We are in the midst of the sordid things but we are not a part of them. We pity sometimes the person who has lack of many things. It may be that that one has the source of true joy. If the readers should think this over and tell us in what they have found the greatest joy, I am sure that it would make enjoyable reading for others.

Art And Movies

Bishop Warren A. Candler finds the motion picture wholly bad. In a recent statement he condemned the entire industry thus: "No consideration of art, education or morality is involved in the business. It is coarse and corrupting commercialism through and through."

If that is true, the sooner the the movies are abolished the better for American life, and such is probably Bishop Candler's conclusion, but he goes farther than most other critics of the screen.

That the pictures lend themselves easily to the service of education, and that producers and managers are quick to realize their possession of an educational instrument unrivalled, was strikingly illustrated yesterday in Asheville in the presentation of "The Cradle of the Washingtons." Such subjects are more and more being used in the production of films.

Property Protected, People Not.

Roger W. Babson in his book "Enduring Investment" stresses the point that we are willing to protect property and not the people. It is harder to get anyone to take the part of any other person than to help in the case of property danger. We are ready to run to a fire and help, or in case of mobs or strikes we are ready to place guarantee in shape of soldiers or police but when some one is unjust to another or deceives another we are liable to think that the person should have been able to protect themselves. An instance came up in the last court of this when it was charged that some young men had started trouble in a Christmas entertainment. The young children as Judge Bryson said were there after weeks of preparation and their friends were there to hear when some persons come in and disturb the meeting and break up the exercises. The children were in danger of having their rights taken away from them and they could not defend themselves. Had the school house been set afire or some one trying to destroy it, there would be no doubt of there being a decision against the young men and they would be prosecuted. There are people and things in this world and in the hurry of life and the care of our own selfish interests property looms up big and people are small. It should be remembered that things are for the persons and not the persons for things. The great thing in life is the man or woman. Things should serve them and not have every person subject to the cultivation of things. We count dollars sometimes and let them hide the best that is in life. Punish the one who offends the boy or girl and forget for a time the material things. Man's rights rise above the material and justice should be done even if it costs a little material substance. Things were created for man and his interests and persons must come to realize that.
