loom in his home. Finer handwriting hardly can be found today.

"Strange as it may seem to us, 'keeping fire' was one of the most important necessities of that time. But this is better understood if we realize that it was a good quarter of a century before anything like the match came into use.

"My grandfather gives in great detail the kinds of wood best suited to preserve fire. And if the fire were to go out, here are his own words how to make a new one:

"Take a piece of cotton no larger than the palm of your hand, pull the fibers till it becomes a loose mass. Place it on the ground in the midst of dry shavings. Then sprinkle a few grains of gun powder on the cotton. Then take a flint and a piece of metal and strike them together so the spark will strike the cotton. Caution, use but very few grains of powder.

"My grandfather was opposed to slavery all his life. Yet, he was of the opinion that it was not freedom from slavery the Negro wanted, but security from ill treatment. He said that if a slave was treated decently he would seldom leave his master. He mentions several slave owners he knew, even in South Carolina and Georgia, who never sold a slave, but took the best of care of them in their old age."

Tobacco Cards

mail as a means of issuing marketing cards for the past two years thereby providing a special service to the farmer which few ASC offices follow. The success and future use of this method of issuing the cards will depend to a great extent on the cooperation given by the farm operator in the care he gives the card after it is placed in his mail box. Ramsey further explained that a marketing card is issued for each farm on which tobacco is produced and that the card is to be used only for identifying the tobacco marketed from the farm for which it is issued. Any misuse of a card by false identification of tobacco is a violation of the marketing quota regulation for which a penalty and reduction in farm allotment will be imposed on the violators. There is also a penalty involved for failure to return the card to the ASC office after marketing has been completed. Producers who lose or misplace their card prior to completion of marketing must go through a three-day waiting period before being issued a replacement card.

In conclusion, the office manager urged all farm operators to become familiar with their responsibilities which are printed on the back of each card so that they might comply with the regulations.

No Fraud

started that Cobb's charges were "not made in good faith," and that Cobb had "only seized on an opportunity to embarrass the Democratic party in Madison County."

"We charge that it's entirely a publicity campaign looking toward the general election," he declared.

The two Republican members of the state board joined the three Democratic members in the board's ruling, which said:

"No evidence has been developed here which indicated any fraud in the Madison County special bond election.

"We're asked to poll 3,500 people who voted in Madison County... on the suspicion of fraud based on the fact that the returns seemed large and lopsided to the Republican state chairman.

"No evidence of any fraud has been introduced.

"The State Board of Elections with the State Bureau of Investigation made an investigation in Madison County and could find no fraud or irregularity in the election.

"The Board finds no fraud and the certification of the Madison County Board of Elections will stand."

Cobb made a lengthy presentation of his charges in which he specifically alleged that returns from 12 of 23 Madison precincts were falsified. In the Marshall precinct, for example, he pointed out that the vote was 905 to 30 against the army bonds.

To back up his charge, Cobb presented an affidavit from Raymond Shelton, Republican judge in the Shelton Laurel Precinct where the army bonds were defeated by a 240 to 0 vote.

Shelton said on the affidavit the 240 figure "is bad wrong" and "there could not have been over 40 (voters) while I was there." Shelton said that at 5 p. m., the precinct registrar told him and other poll officials they could go home because "there was no use of staying any longer — that there wouldn't be anyone else in" to vote. Shelton said the registrar told him "to sign the papers and he would finish up."

In other affidavits presented by Cobb, citizens swore that the Oct. 27 voting was very light in Madison.

Cobb asserted that the Democratic party in Madison rigged the elections returns as a means of "striking back at Governor Hodges" because Hodges had accused the Madison representative in the legislature of lack of cooperation.

"They successfully slapped the Governor in the face by hitting hard against the bond issues he supported," Cobb declared. "But they went too far in actually defeating two bond issues supported by the rest of the voters in the state."

Cobb took note of a statement by Trotter which pointed out that Republican precinct judges in Madison had signed the election returns and that Cobb's charges amounted to "an indictment" against Republican judges.

Cobb said that in Madison the Democratic-controlled elections board had selected persons recommended by the Republican party as judges in only 3 of 23 precincts.

"The Republican party does not endorse, support or necessarily trust any of the so-called Republican judges in most of the precincts in Madison County," Cobb declared.
