TIDINGS OF COMFORT AND JOY

Memory Selection: "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him who brings good tidings, who publishes peace..." —(Isaiah 52:7).

Lesson Text: Isaiah 40: 1-11; 52:7-10.

Today's lesson is the last in a unit on "A People Uprooted." In our endeavor to help adults recognize that God's steadfast love has power to sustain individuals and nations, the question we examine today is: In what way does our experience of redemption lead us to proclaim tidings of comfort and joy?

The Bible material for this lesson is essentially the announcement of good news. Its joyous tone is comparable only to that of the angels on the first Christmas morning: "Behold, I bring you good news of a great joy which will come to all the people" (Luke 2:10). Good news is always welcome. How gladly this prophet's message of good news was received by the exiles in Babylon one can only imagine.

But what of good news for the world today? Surely, if ever a people or peoples needed a message of good tidings it is now, in this time of world confusion and turmoil! Are the good tidings of Isaiah needed today also? What are the major points of that message, and what might they mean to us?

First of all, deliverance was announced. Captivity was to end. Are not peoples and people today held captive in many ways? For some it may be a form of political captivity, for others social or economic underprivilege. In this country, where most of us feel relatively free from this sort of bondage, as individuals we are victims of all sorts of fears, from fear of destruction by a nuclear war to fear of failure and loneliness. A message of deliverance from all these forms of bondage would surely be good tidings.

Secondly, the prophet's message was a promise of peace. How much people everywhere desire peace! The enthusiastic reception given anything that promises peace of mind is evidence of a deep sense of need for peace on the level of individual experience. How welcome, then, would be the prophet's promise of peace!

Thirdly, the prophet's message included the declaration to Jerusalem that "her iniquity is pardoned." This indeed was basic to the other points in the message. Only a pardoned people could be delivered and restored to their own land and live in peace.

This in turn implied repentance. One may well ask if there do not exist today some prerequisites for receiving good tidings such as those of the prophet. In preceding lessons we have discussed sin, individual and national, as the cause of the downfall of a people. Is it not true that our personal and national disobediences of God is the cause of the various "captivities" in which we find ourselves? If so, then good tidings for us, too, must be the declaration that our iniquity is pardoned.

For us, also, pardon can only come through repentance, through turning away from our disobedience, whether individual, social, or national. It would seem that we have a great need for the "good tidings" of the prophet's message and that we must prepare for it if it is to be ours.

Our Christian faith is a message of good news, the good news for which the world waits. The challenge to us is to proclaim it. As we do so, we may hear in our hearts the words of Isaiah sung by a mighty choir:

"How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him who brings good tidings."
