VOLUNTARY FEED
GRAIN PROGRAM
RECOMMENDED

Continuation of the Government feed grain program for the next few years on a voluntary basis has been recommended to Secretary of Agriculture Orville L. Freeman, by his Advisory Committee on Feed Grains, meeting in Washington early in December. The committee recognized, however, that at some time in the future a mandatory program for limiting acreage of feed grains might become necessary.

The meeting of the committee—a subcommittee of the overall Advisory Committee on Wheat and Feed Grains—was presided over jointly by Fred J. Ludwig of Laurens, Iowa, chairman, and by Fred V. Heinkel, of Columbia, Mo., chairman of the larger committee.

Emory Robinson, chairman of the Madison County ASC committee, points out that it was this subcommittee which recommended the emergency feed grain program early in 1961. At the conclusion of its recent meeting, the subcommittee commended the Secretary and his staff on the success of the 1961 and 1962 programs, which will reduce feed grain surpluses by about one billion bushels in 2 years through offering inducements to farmers to plant smaller acreages to corn and grain sorghums (and barley in

The Committee also gave general approval to several program features designed to increase participation in a voluntary program in 1961 and later years. These included limiting price support on non-allocation crops, such as oats and soybeans, to farmers who cooperate in the feed grain program; giving priority on ACP payments to farmers participating in the feed grain program; and limiting the opportunity to produce wheat on feed grain acreage to cooperators.

1962). In considering the program for 1963, the Committee recommended that price supports—through loans and payments in kind—and diversion payments be set at levels high enough to encourage farmers again to hold down their acreages of feed grains. The recommended level of reduction for 1963 was 25 million acres below the acreage planted in 1959-60 (the base period); this would compare with a 1962 reduction of about 30 million acres below the base. Looking forward to programs for 1964 and later years, the Committee pointed to increased farm income as the major objective. This should be achieved by a combination of increased price supports, production payments, and diversion payments.
