TRAGEDY STRIKES

In what started out as a gala Hallowe'en around Marshall suddenly turned into a dreadful nightmare late Friday night when two Marshall girls met sudden death and a third passenger in a car was hospitalized following a horrible wreck on the Marshall by-pass.

A few hours before the accident, boys and girls were having a wonderful time at the Hallowe'en Carnival at the Marshall school. There were the customary spooks, contests and games so enjoyed by everyone, especially the children. Adding to the enjoyment were the annual "trick or treat" visits to the various homes. After a happy night of enjoyment and fun, most of the children had returned to their homes.

Little did they know that one of their classmates would meet death in a wreck and another of their classmates would be rushed to an Asheville hospital suffering from a broken arm and other injuries.

However, this happened and what started out as a routine Hallowe'en was abruptly turned into tragedy.

Just what caused the car to leave the highway and crash into an embankment is conjecture. Perhaps a blowout? Maybe driving too fast? Possible that another car was involved? Just now no one actually knows. What is known, however, is that two fine young people were suddenly taken from us (and the third, fortunately, survives).

Our deepest sympathy is extended to both families.

CONDUCT GOOD — STUPID

Early reports about Hallowe'en from officers and others were encouraging around Marshall. Perhaps the most orderly Hallowe'en observance ever noted here was during the past week-end. Few serious pranks were reported. Few, if any, windows were marked up with all sorts of words. Little commotion was reported on Main Street following the Hallowe'en Carnival, much to the delight of adults who like to sleep on this special night.

The Carnival was highly enjoyable and the conduct was excellent. Our hearts were gladdened at these fine reports. After all, our young people aren't half as "bad" as some people like to believe.

But — wait a minute!

Reports here Monday morning disillusioned us.

Officers and angry motorists revealed that some trees had been cut down and dragged ACROSS HIGHWAYS and ROADS, causing considerable damage to cars. Miraculously, no serious injuries resulted from this uncalled for vandalism or just plain stupid meanness.

True, Dedrick Cody's car was damaged some $300 when he and a passenger crashed into one of these "planted" trees across the road on Gabriel's Creek about three miles from Mars Hill. True, Rayburn Reeves, of Marshall, ran into one of these trees across the highway on Mashburn Hill, causing considerable damage. True, trees had to be removed from the road near Johnson's Self-Service Store at Walnut. True, trees were layed across the road near the bridge at Barnard.

Is this possible? How in the world could any person with good sense do such a thing? Don't they know such foolishness could cause death, injury, as well as great damage? If the guilty persons are apprehended we hope they will be punished to the full extent of the law and then we hope their parents will take charge from there.

It is also reported that some 20 windows were broken out of the Ebbs Chapel School with broken glass being thrown all over the school lunchroom.

Such Hallowe'en "tricks" make this writer sick. When it comes to this sort of "enjoyment" and "pranks" then it's time to call a halt. Besides, Hallowe'en is primarily for SMALL children, 12 years of age and younger. It certainly isn't supposed to be an occasion for older boys to run wild and destroy. Small children are cute in their costumes and during other observances such as "trick or treat" but grown boys are sometimes disgusting and revolting — especially when they become destructive.

which they had seen before had no effect on the appetites of the men, as they ate heartily of the big meal provided. That afternoon we visited the Blount Experiment Station, of University of Tennessee, where Mr. Tom High explained the forage and pasture work, stating that they firmly believe that corn silage is the backbone of the beef cattle industry; and that if we are going to compete with the midwest, we should use the forages and we can produce more beef. They are working on finishing cattle with a minimum of grain and a maximum of grass and silage. Then Mr. Will Butts spoke to the group on the testing program for the University's sires. He told the men how they take the most promising bull calves on the basis of type and weaning weight and feed them on in the feed lot to get a lifetime gaining rate, at about two years of age. About half way through this lifetime feeding period, the more promising bulls were picked out to be bred to a few heifers, so that by the time the bull is two years old, they have a record on his weaning weight and a sample of his calves. He also showed us some of their cow herd and explained that they try to use mostly grass and silage and very little grain to feed this herd throughout the year. The group also enjoyed watching the crew there at the University doctoring their bulls, in preparation for them to go into sales and service. One highlight was a chute which laid the bull down while a sander was used to trim the feet. The tour then moved on to Lowland, Tenn. where we visited the Valleydale Feed Lot of the Grigsby Brothers. Mr. Ralph Grigsby welcomed the group and explained their operation. The basis of their feeding program was corn silage. They had a trench silo which holds 120 thousand tons. This silage is mixed with grain and supplements and fed, free choice, in a concrete bunker more than a mile and a quarter long. They had facilities for seven thousand head and they figured to run two lots a year, or fourteen thousand head per year. Many of the cattle in the lot had come from the Asheville sales. It is quite a spectacular sight to see thousands of cattle lining up at a feed bunk this size. They were processing some of the steers which had just come to the lot at that time. They received a vaccination for leptos, black leg, and malignant edema plus a vitamin complex. They wormed them with phenothiazine boluses and treated them with Buleone poured on their backs for grubs and lice. The tour arrived back in Marshall at 7:00 Wednesday night and it was enjoyed thoroughly by all.
