Salvation Army Contributions Can Be Mailed

The Salvation Army will again be providing Christmas dinners for many persons in Madison County this year.

Many persons have asked, "How can I help if I don't make it to town to put a donation in the kettle?"

This is how: Checks may be made out to The Salvation Army and sent to the Salvation Army, General Delivery, Marshall, N. C. 28753; or to Box 295, Hot Springs, N. C. 28743. Cash may also be mailed this way.

Dr. Harley Jolley Receives Award

Dr. Harley F. Jolley, history professor at Mars Hill College, received an "Award of Merit" from the American Association for State and Local History recently for his book, "The Blue Ridge Parkway." The book was one of 15 historical publications in the United States and Canada selected for the annual award of the non-profit educational organization set up to promote localized history in the two countries. Jolley's book about the development of the Parkway also won for him the 1970 Thomas Wolfe Literary Award of the Western North Carolina Historical Society. He was elected president of the local society in October.

Ray Accepts New Position

Jimmy Ray, son of Mrs. Hughie Ray of Mars Hill, is the new Agricultural Extension Agent for Cherokee Indian Reservation.

Ray, who succeeds T. Brawley who retired earlier this year, attended Mars Hill College and North Carolina State University.

Ray worked briefly with Soil Conservation Service in Rutherford County upon graduation and joined Jackson County extension staff in 1965 as assistant agent.

He hopes to develop a 4-H program on the reservation. His office is in the civic center in Cherokee.

Ponder Backs Taylor On Burley Leases

U. S. Rep. Roy A. Taylor testified Tuesday in Washington before a Senate Agriculture sub-committee in support of legislation he is co-sponsoring to permit the consolidation of small burley tobacco allotments through a leasing and transfer arrangement.

Under terms of the bill which has already passed the House, burley growers wishing to expand their operation could lease and transfer to their own farms allotments assigned to other farms within the same county.

Growers could lease the additional tobacco acreage for a period not to exceed five years, but could not lease more than ten acres beyond that which they are presently allotted.

Appearing as a witness with

Taylor was Zeno Ponder, a Madison County burley grower who was also representing the Asheville Agriculture Development Council and the North Carolina Farm Bureau Federation, and John Cyrus of the North Carolina Department of Agriculture.

Both Taylor and Ponder stressed to the subcommittee that most burley allotments are so small that it is often uneconomical or impractical for the allotment holder to grow tobacco.

The only witness to express opposition to the bill was Kentucky Senator John Sherman Cooper who argued that the leasing of burley allotments should be considered only in connection with a full review of the entire burley program.
