Should Funerals Be Pre-Arranged?

Talking about death is often difficult. Yet a death in the family often creates problems for the survivors.

Is advance planning for the funeral an answer to such problems?

"Sometimes," says Albert S. Lineberry, President of the North Carolina Funeral Directors Association. "But the advantages and disadvantages for advance planning depends upon individual circumstances. What may be in the best interest for some may be impractical for others."

Advance planning for the funeral is now, however, considered by many for varied reasons. Persons without children or close relatives, for example, often want to assure themselves of an adequate funeral. Retired persons sometimes desire to make arrangements that their bodies be returned to their hometowns at death.

"The pre-need arrangement does provide a person with the opportunity to indicate his wishes in writing," points out

Lineberry. "It also enables one to review and evaluate current funeral costs, funeral ceremonies, and burial procedures."

And counseling with a funeral director may well be both an educational and positive experience, he feels.

"Aside from the specific reasons for discussing advance funeral arrangements, it brings the subject of death into the open and affords the family an opportunity to share their thoughts," he explains.

Lineberry also feels that it is always wise to consult those who will be affected by the death. "It is important to remember that while the funeral is of the person who has died," he comments, "it is actually for those who survive. Those survivors whose feelings will actually be those who survive. Those survivors whose will be most affected by the death should be consulted before prescribing a definite kind of funeral. Permitting them to assist in advance planning of the funeral and interment serves as a healthy outlet for their grief."

Information for pre-planning the funeral is now available in a new pamphlet, "Advance Planning for the Funeral," recently developed by the North Carolina Funeral Directors Association as a public service. The pamphlet may be obtained without cost or obligation by writing the NCFDA, P. O. Box 274, Fremont, NC. 27830.

One Second = 9 Billion Parts Things You Didn't Know About Time

How many times have you glanced at your watch today? If you're typical of most people, you probably look at your watch at least a dozen times a day. We live by the clock.

But, what is time? It may surprise you to learn our chief clock is the Earth itself—as it moves some 66,600 miles per hour in orbit around the Sun. So that when we measure time, we are, in fact, measuring the periodic motion of the Earth.

Since 1964, however, scientists have not considered the Earth completely accurate. The "year"—equivalent to one complete Earth orbit around the Sun—is "off" they reported, up to 3 seconds. They pointed out that the Earth's year is the equivalent to 31,556,925.9747 seconds, plus or minus 3 seconds.

Scientists spotted the error by using new clocks that permitted them to develop a new definition for the second: 9,192,631,770 "periods of radiation" of the atom of cesium 133. The pulsating atom of cesium 133 is now the basis of the world's most accurate atomic clocks. It would take a cesium 133 atomic clock 100,000 years to lose more than 5 seconds.

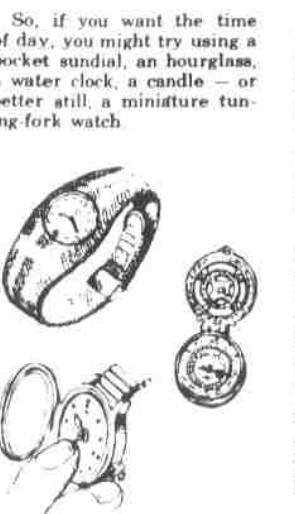

In contrast, experts report that conventional watches are "accurate" to within 30 seconds a day. But in 1961 Bulova introduced the first electronic watch—the Accutron—which is accurate to within 60 seconds a month.

The watch utilizes a tuning fork in place of the usual "balance wheel." As with the cesium 133 atom, the tuning fork vibrates at a precise rate (360 times a second) which accounts for the timepiece's extraordinary accuracy.

The latest development is a miniature version of the watch aptly called mini Accutron, designed for women. It's interesting to note that while the tuning fork on the large model vibrates 360 times a second, the one in the smaller version vibrates 480 times. Researchers say the higher frequency compensates for the small size of the fork and permits the same degree of accuracy.

Earlier devices to measure time included the pocket sundial (which was useful only in good weather), the familiar hourglass (if you remembered to reverse it frequently), and the water clock, which measured the length of time it took for water to flow from one container to another (as long as it didn't freeze).

Old Anglo-Saxons used a marked candle—the distance it took for the flame to burn down from one marking to another—to measure time.
