More Tar Heels Back Work Under EFP

A projected total of 4,660 people will be employed under the federal Emergency Job Program in North Carolina by next Saturday, March 15, Governor Jim Holshouser said today.

As of February 18, a total of 2,739 persons were on the job under the federal money contracted through the Office of Manpower Services, making North Carolina one of the leading Southeast states in putting the U. S. Labor Department dollars to work.

The bulk of the jobs provided with the emergency money has been filled by non-skilled workers in construction and maintenance. Other jobs include clerical work, law enforcement, work assistance, educational staffing, health care, firemen and administrative personnel for local governments.

The majority of wage rates fall between $2.25 to $3 an hour, with the heaviest concentration of emergency jobs in the industrial Piedmont Crescent.

The latest figures supplied by the Employment Security Commission show an estimated 263,000 North Carolinians out of work, the highest number ever recorded in the Tar Heel State.

"We realize that those persons put into emergency jobs represent only a small percentage of the unemployed work force, but I feel the State is showing a willingness and indeed, a capability, of meeting the current unemployment crisis," said the Governor.

"I think we have shown that in just a few short weeks we have rallied to put thousands of unemployed people to work with federal emergency money provided by Congress," said Holshouser. "Now that we have the know-how to deal with the unemployment crisis, we stand ready for Congress to release additional emergency funds to put other unemployed North Carolinians to work."

Under the current congressional authorization, funds for all the emergency jobs will run out by August 1.

First Union will rebate up to $250. So you can stop looking and start buying.

Our generous rebate is good until March 31. And it works quite simple. You get a First Union new car loan. We give you a rebate of up to $250. Which means you have four good reasons for buying that new car now. One, today's high trade-in values; rebates that make your old car worth more toward your new car.

Two, the big rebate being offered through many car dealers today.

Three, First Union's own sizeable rebate, which can save you up to $250, depending on the size and number of your monthly loan payments.

And, four, our optional New Plan 4R, which will make your monthly payments smaller by extending them over a longer period of time.

So take one last drive in your old car. Go to the car dealer of your choice and work out a good deal.

Then contact First Union for a loan. And another good deal.
