

Parents Want New Marshall-Walnut School

December. Ernest O. Burnette Spokesman
A spokesman for the board said that the members of the board had already concurred with the first three resolutions and were doing all they could to relieve the situation which now exists.
This brought forth many questions from various persons as to just what the board had really done to speed up action and planning for a new school.
Teddy Cody of Marshall suggested that the county might borrow money through an FHA loan. Leake, however, stated that the statutes prohibit the county (commissioners) from borrowing money.
Bill Roberts said he was in favor of instructing their attorney (Leake) to ask the county commissioners to set up a bond referendum so that the citizens of the county could approve or disapprove additional taxes to finance a new school.
Don Anderson cautioned the audience about the crucial wisdom of a bond issue at this time and suggested the board of education make two work sessions to study the feasibility of a bond election. He commented that in addition to the board members, the superintendent, the principal of the Marshall school (Bill Brigrman), the commissioners, health officials and other local and state representatives as well as parents be included in the study sessions.
Richard Wilde of Marshall questioned the delay any longer in taking immediate steps for a referendum. "Why delay further. Haven't you men (board members) already stated that you have discussed this need many times. Have you no definite plans to offer us at this meeting?" Wilde said. Wilde further said he was tired of one delay after another at the "cost of our children." "The Island is nothing more than a pig pen and a disgrace," Wilde continued.
Vernon Chapman of Mars Hill told the board members and the audience that "... we want action now. We're tired of waiting. Something must be done now as quickly as possible." Chapman stated that he was from Mars Hill but he was vitally concerned about the new Marshall-Walnut School prospects.

Cloice Plemmons of Walnut wanted to know just what the people would be voted on if a referendum was called including the overall cost, the location and other specifics to be considered.
J. Bert King, architect of Asheville, answered that he could estimate the size of the proposed school, number of rooms, etc., in a few days by using the required specifics as to state regulations. King has had years of experience in the construction and planning of schools and spoke ably of the various problems.

Someone asked why the board had found ways to "build a new elementary school at Mars Hill (now in progress) and not found a way to start a new Marshall-Walnut School?
Bobby Ponder, a member of the board, said that the biggest problem was money and that he had never known a substitute for money. "We want a new school just like you do but we must have money, and a lot of it, to build a new Marshall-Walnut Elementary School," he said.

The Rev. Vincent Young, of Marshall, suggested a quick date for another meeting at which time a "package deal" could be offered the public to enlighten them just what was involved in the proposed plans for a new school.
Zeno Ponder spoke of the need for a new school and after asking for a show of hands from those present from different sections of the county, remarked that the vast majority of those present were from the Marshall-Walnut areas. He pointed out that citizens from this school district constituted only about 20 per cent of the voters in the county and suggested that the "package deal" include a study of schools in all the sections of the county.

Several other parents and concerned citizens spoke, all in favor of immediate action by the board.
The need for a new Marshall-Walnut Elementary School in a different location other than the Island was unanimously expressed but the huge sum necessary for its construction remains a major problem.

The meeting finally adjourned after 1 1/2 hours of intense but orderly discussions.
The final action was a motion and second that the Board of Education instruct its attorney to contact the commissioners to set up a referendum on a bond issue as soon as possible and that the architect come up with a suitable plan which will meet state requirements as to cost, location, size, and other pertinent details.

Certification For Farmers Is Delayed

The Environmental Protection Agency originally set Oct. 21 as the deadline for farmers certification to use restricted-use pesticides. Chemical companies have not yet changed their labels to indicate which pesticides come under restricted use. Therefore, a delay is now being considered as to the date that certification will be required. The Spring of 1978 has been mentioned as a possible time for the law to come into effect.
