

The Appalachian Conference Topic Number One: Energy

Energy, the most critical issue for the Appalachian Region in the 1980s, will be the major topic of the third annual regional conference of the Appalachian Commission Oct. 22-24 in Binghamton, N.Y.

The purpose of the conference will be to define the role Appalachia will play in resolving the nation's energy crisis while ensuring that demands of increased energy production will not threaten health, safety or environmental standards in the region. The conference will also examine ways to contain the rising cost of health care, a serious threat to the economic security of the Region's people. New York Gov. Hugh L. Carey, ARC States' co-chairman and conference host, said, "Possessing a major share of the nation's domestic energy reserves, Appalachia is a key to any solution of our energy problems. The ARC federal state partnership can serve as a vehicle for the cooperation we must have between Frostbelt and Sunbelt to meet national energy goals and to guarantee Appalachia's citizens their full share of the economic growth we expect from expanded energy production." ARC Acting Federal Co-chairman William E. Albers said, "ARC and its member states are actively developing energy from all the Region's rich resources: coal, water, wood and sun. The conference will help catalog our experiences in the energy field and demonstrate our readiness to lead the rest of the nation toward the energy goals now being developed by the Administration and Congress." The conference, to be held at the Holiday Inn Arena in Binghamton, will be attended by governors of the Appalachian states, delegates from each state selected by the governors, federal officials and citizens of the Region. Registration will begin on Oct. 22. On Oct. 23, conference participants will attend energy panels on: replacing oil with coal; coal switching and conversion; organizational arrangements and institutional barriers; unconventional sources and energy conservation; energy-efficient transportation of resources, people and goods; and protecting life and the environment. A health panel will deal with health care cost control. Panel findings and recommendations will be presented at a plenary session on the morning of Oct. 24. The Appalachian Regional Commission will meet that afternoon with recommendations from the conference as the major item of business.

Cystic Fibrosis Campaign Will Open Oct. 19

Wanda Carter and Gay Henderson, chairpersons for the Mars Hill area cystic fibrosis "Kiss Your Baby" campaign, announced that the campaign will be conducted Oct. 19 and 20. Every mother of a youngster is requested to kiss her baby with special attention to the taste of the skin. A major sign of cystic fibrosis is a high salt content in the perspiration. The local chairperson emphasized that the two-fold campaign is designed to alert parents to the symptoms of CF and other lung-damaging diseases of children and to collect funds in support of medical-scientific programs at the care, teaching and research centers in the United States. Many of the 150,000 North Carolina youngsters who suffer with one or more lung diseases are treated at the Duke and N.C. Memorial CF Centers which are supported by funds raised in local communities.

ILLUMINATING FACT
WASHINGTON (AP) — Electric street lighting celebrated its 100th anniversary this year. On Sept. 2, 1879, Charles F. Brush of Cleveland was granted a patent for arc lamps that could be used for street lights. Brush, who became known as the "father of electric street lighting," according to IPD Inc., a non-profit, public, educational group dedicated to preserving the patent system, successfully demonstrated his invention in Cleveland with the result that the city became the first municipality to use arc lighting for thoroughfares. His system soon spread around the world. Brush was awarded more than 50 patents, most of them in the electrical field.

The program will begin at 7:30 and the speaker for the evening will be Clyde Marshbanks, formerly of Mars Hill but now living in Birmingham, Mich.
