

MAKE THEM FIGHT

University News Letter.
 Speaking of the selective draft, a Times exchange says that when the Federal officials get busy conscripting soldiers for war service they ought to take first of all—
 All producers and handlers of luxuries.
 All cotton farmers who are not raising enough food for their families and farm animals, with surplus to spare for their country and our men at the front.
 All wage earners who neglect gardening around their homes.
 All owners of unplanted vacant town lots.
 All owners of idle farms.
 All useless middle men.
 All conspirators who beat down prices to the producers of food and hold the prices the consumers must pay, and
 All speculators in food prices.
 The miners, foresters, food and clothing producers, factory hands, transporters, and managers of industries, are all needed at home, it says; as for the rest, they can be spared to fight.
 In this day of extreme peril to civilization the parasites of society rich and poor ought to be the first to be drafted into military service. They are fit for nothing else; make them fight.
 Some pretty straight talk; but it is worth thinking over.

LOVE OF DISPLAY IS GREAT SIN

Wives Ought to Be Mighty Careful About Adorning and Urging Their Husbands to Earn Money at the Expense of Their Souls, Cautions Billy Sunday's Wife.

(New York Evening Sun.)
 "I think the chief vice of American women is their love of display, putting on style to keep up with the other women, buying clothes and furniture that they couldn't afford, entertaining more than they can afford, striving, striving, striving. And there's no real satisfaction in it."
 That is Mrs. Sunday's opinion of you, ladies of the U. S. A. And Mrs. Sunday has been studying you for a good many years, as she has accompanied her surprising husband up and down the land. She has been entertained in hundreds of homes, spoken before hundreds of women's audiences, met and shaken hands with thousands of "well dressed" and talked with thousands of women. And that is her conclusion about American women—entertained without any qualifying adjectives, pictures or otherwise, such as her husband is wont to employ in describing sinners, but uttered from the lips with great conviction.

...the women who have had one real testimony. Some folks say religion is an emotion; so is love, but it's real, isn't it?
 Speaking of love, there isn't any romance in history that seems quite so romantic to Mrs. Sunday as her romance and Billy's. It is really hard to get her to talk about anything or anybody but him, and she shows herself to be a very old-fashioned woman in several ways that are immediately apparent; to wit: She is perfectly satisfied with him, she has never felt any "feminine unrest," and she dearly loves to dwell on family reminiscences.

The Foo to Mashled

(Baltimore Sun.)
 The Health Department has issued a declaration of war in which all humans can join without regard to creed, color, international sympathies or previous condition of profusion.

We imagine that not a single patient will protest against this war, that no heart will be found so soft and sentimental as to put in a plea for the protection of that "varmint" that purveyor of disease, that enemy of the early morning or the late afternoon nap, that inconspicuously insidious invader of the home, that favorite child of household—the fly.
 There is not a man, woman or child in Baltimore who will not gladly enlist in the Health Department's war of extermination, and every one from five years up to 100 is fighting one. If each of us will do our duty, Mr. and Mrs. Fly and the little blue will have a mighty hard time of it this season in the Monumental City.
 The fly is no joke. He is the in-met Menace of the ages.

He has always been Chief of Staff to plagues, contagious and infectious in pestilence, the horror and torment of the battlefield. He has kept pace with mankind in nearly every clime and country. He followed Cyrus and his devastating armies and added his particular brand of hell to ancient glory; he sighed with Alexander when the Macedonians found no more worlds to conquer and battle in blood; he loved Julius Caesar for the rich banquets he provided in Gaul and elsewhere; he admired Napoleon for the unusual opportunities he afforded to the fly trade. What statistician can compute the length and breadth, the height and the depth of the crimes he has committed since this old planet began to spin around the sun? His special assignment from his father, the devil, has been to increase the misery of mankind. Carrying poison and calamity in his wings he has been the insect Hum of history, the sworn foe of religion and civilized philosophy, the funder of household strife, the disturber of friendship, the impatient interrupter of love's young dream!

Who knows what statesmen have blundered because of his irritating and offensive activities, what empires have fallen through the temporary insanity engendered by his pernicious intrusions at a critical moment, what virtuous dynasties have been overthrown through his maddening attacks or his propaganda of disease, what baleful influences he has exerted upon history and literature? But for him perhaps Lucretia Borgia might have been a gentle missionary and Cotton Mather a honey-maker instead of a manufacturer of moral vinegar.

The fly came in with Adam and the serpent, not to mention Eve. He was young when Noah launched the ark, but not too young or unwise not to take passage on that lifeboat. He was still youthful and debonair when the pyramids were put under contract, and he was in the first flush of manhood when Socrates was glibly talking about wisdom. He has known intimately the small and great in all generations of men since the first woman conceived a distaste to the simple life and gardening and determined to found cities and subscribe to a fashion book. His survival through all these ages is a mystery to be explained, not by the backing of Hades. His continued existence is a reproach to our morals as well as to our sense. That he should be able to maintain himself in an age when science has conquered the air above, the earth beneath and the waters under the earth is an anomaly and an anachronism. The

THE HIGH SCHOOL TEAM

Made Good Record in Spite of Handicaps
 This article for the Dispatch was delayed for some time since the team has been expected to play Donaldson Military school but the latter put off the game till their team disbanded. Therefore, the season has been ended a good while, but the cause of the article's delay was for the reason stated above.
 Under the leadership of "Gleazy" Wilson and Voigt Sutton and Jake Wade the club played a prosperous season though the managers had hard luck getting suitable games. In all 7 games were played, two against prep schools, one against an amateur club, and the remaining against high schools. In the four high school games Dunn won three. They won on both prep-school contests and a playing the amateur Barnett county team of Linden they lost by the close score of 4-3 and should have won, but for a few misplays. The record as a whole was won 3 and lost 2, which, by the way, is somewhat good.

The pitching staff of the season was divided between Wilson and Sutton though Beasley was secured to fill Wilson's boots when the latter was sick. On first Wade played for the locals. At second "Gene" Cole held down the back and though never discovering his real batting eye played a lively stick in fielding. At short, the big boy, "Shorty" Jackson, was at bat in this season during the season and though laid off in the midst of sickness he played some stellar ball while he was well. Sutton played third and played it well. Where he figured too was in the hitting. In the outfield Warren, Lee, and Adley with Russell made a good fielding team, and a fair hitting bunch of gardeners.

BRITISH EXPERT

LAUDS RAILROADS OF UNITED STATES
 Tells Congress Committee That They Lead World.
NO GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP

Washington, May 14.—That the United States is face to face with a serious crisis in its commercial affairs, due to the conditions by which its transportation system is confronted, was the opinion expressed by W. M. Acworth, England's leading authority on railways, before the Newlands joint committee on interstate commerce at a special session held here to enable the committee to hear his views before his departure for London this week.

Two days ago were necessary, according to Mr. Acworth, to avert this crisis and to solve the threatening railroad problem confronting the country.

The first is to allow the railroads to charge freight rates sufficient to meet the great advance in operating expenses which is taking place and to enable them to command the credit necessary to provide the extensions and improvements needed to meet the growing demands of business. The second is to do away with the multiple and conflicting systems of regulation that now hamper railway operation and to provide one centralized regulatory agency with such local subdivisions as may be necessary.

Higher Rates a Public Necessity.
 Mr. Acworth's views on the transportation situation in the United States were expressed in answer to questions by members of the committee, who asked him to apply his knowledge of railway conditions throughout the world and of the experience of other countries with government ownership to the present problem before the United States.

The fundamental factor in the situation is very simple," said Mr. Acworth. "It lies in the fact that you cannot get three-quarters of a cent's worth of work done for less than three-quarters of a cent, no matter whether the agency performing it is a government or private enterprise. Freight rates must advance when the cost of performing the service advances as it is doing at present, just as the price of bread or meat or any other commodity increases with increased cost of production."

On the subject of government ownership of railways Mr. Acworth said: "It is impossible to obtain satisfactory results on government railways in a democratic state unless the management is cut loose from direct political control. Neither Australia nor any other country with a democratic constitution—perhaps an exception ought to be made of Switzerland—has succeeded in maintaining a permanent severance. In France, in Belgium, in Italy, parliamentary interference never has been abandoned for a moment."

The facts show that government interference has meant running the railways at a loss for the benefit of the people at large, but to personal interests.

Prussia, Mr. Acworth said, was the best example of an efficient government railway system, and he pointed out that military considerations were treated as paramount importance in the Prussian railway system. While American freight rates had been reduced nearly 40 per cent in thirty years, rates in Prussia were nearly as high as at the beginning of the period. While the charge for moving a ton of freight one mile in the United States was a trifle over three-quarters of a cent, the rate in Prussia was 1 1/2 cents.
 "As illustrating the difference in rates between government and private roads Mr. Acworth compared the railways of New South Wales, Australia, with those of Texas. While the amount of traffic in each case he pointed out, the Texas railways performed for the public four times as much service as the government owned roads of New South Wales. The charge in Texas for hauling a ton of freight one mile was less than 1 cent, while in the Australian state it was well over 3 cents.
