These unfortunates who are serving time on the roads of Harnett were visited by the Dunn Masonic Santa Claus disguised as Sir George Washington Gardner. Fruits, nuts, candies and the other little things that are not included in the field ration of the force were distributed by George. It is hard to tell who was given the most enjoyment--George or the road workers. Besides doing this bit of good work for Masonry and humanity, George kept his car busy throughout Christmas week distributing presents and spreading cheer in what otherwise would have been bleak and lone homes during the season.

Major John A. Parker, of the United States Army and Mrs. Parker, are visiting in this section. Major Parker is a son of D. J. Parker and a brother to Benjamin Franklin Parker. When the national guard was ordered to the Mexican border he was a captain of a Charlotte company. Later he served in the war with Germany and was mustered out of service with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. A few months afterwards he was induced to return to the secvice with the rank of Major. Mrs. Parker arrived Wednesday morning from New York and was accompanied as far as Sanford by her husband, who had to continue on to Camp Jackson on business. The Major arrived yesterday from Camp Jackson and will spend several days in this section before returning to his home station, New York.

He left here several years ago to study dentistry and after graduation located in Memphis, Tenn., where he has built up a remarkably good practice. He has been appointed to do the dental work for ex-service men around Memphis who have held on to their war risk insurance and has a large private practice besides. In spite of this, however, he finds time to fill the chair of Professor of Dentistry in the University of West-ern Tennessee. Elmer has many friends in Dunn who are proud of the record he has made and gratified by his success.

The Federal Reserve

The people in this section of the country, at least, have faith in the soundness of Congressman Lever's judgment. He is a member of the Farmers Loan organization and was an active factor in some of the most beneficent legislation on record. At Spartanburg, where Mr. Lever was asked to make a talk to farmers, he told a sober truth when he said that but for the operations of the Federal Reserve Board, cotton would now be selling at five cents a pound. Possibly we might go further back than that and lay down the proposition that but for the machinery of the Federal Reserve Board, Germany by this time might be master of the world, including our own country. Governor Harding and Secretary

Glass are exactly right in their contention that it is not within the pro- vision or the wheat situation. Its mis- sion is quite clearly defined and there are bounds over it which it may not trespass. The Federal Reserve Board acts as the fly-wheel to the financial machinery of the nation. Holding it- self intact and strictly confined to its functions, it will at the same time the better safeguard the interests of the country as a whole.--Char- lotte Observer.

DUNN'S WEEKLY REVIEW While a general turn for the bet- ter in business is still delayed, ex- pectations of confidence are rather more numerous. Inasmuch as senti- ment is an important factor in any commercial movement, the improved feeling manifest in various quarters is obviously an encouraging indica- tion. With the progress of the econo- mic readjustment, the future is be- lieved with less apprehension, and hopes of some revival after the end of the year are growing stronger. At the present period, when annual accounting requires attention, activ- ity in other than retail lines is not ordinarily witnessed, and there is special cause now for quietness in primary branches. Such a situation in the latter field reflects the restric- tion of demands from retailers, and the rate of output continues to re- ceive as contracts on the books of producers are worked off and are not replaced by new orders. Recogni- tion of a diminished purchasing power becomes more general as un- employment at industrial centers in- creases, and Christmas trade is not expected to equal that of recent years when many consumers were buying indiscriminately and with little re- gard to prices. The prevailing policy, in contrast, is one of economy and retrenchment, and of limiting pur- chases to actual necessities. While in- ability to absorb goods in the pre- vious unprecedented volume largely explains the comparative slowness of the retail turnover, the price question is also highly influential, and there is a disposition nearly everywhere to await the further reductions that are believed to be foreshadowed. A partial check to the price declines has appeared in some wholesale mar- kets, but the main trend is still un- mistakably downward. Dunn's list, for the thirty-first consecutive week, showing a preponderance of recessions. Maintenance of the recent active buying of gray cotton goods has not been witnessed, and prices have shown a tendency to fall back to pre- vious low levels upon the abatement of demand. Recognition of a decreas- ing public purchasing power is becom- ing more general, and the lessened consumption is as noticeable in the agricultural sections as in the indus- trial centers. Unemployment, mean- while, is increasing, further curtail- ment appearing at New England points and elsewhere. While there is a broadening interest in merchandise in some quarters, the inquiries are on such low price levels that not much headway is being made in securing business on goods to be manufactur- ed. Representative jobbers are pick- ing up small lots from time to time, but are giving attention to Spring needs only in cases where very low prices are named. To hasten the movement of stocks of Fall men's wear, the largest producer has an- nounced an auction sale of 5,000 pieces of overcoatings, to begin De- cember 14. Such prices as may be reached at this sale are expected to give some idea of the prices that may be fixed for the new Fall sea- son. The general hide market, which failed to respond to the recent large clearance of domestic packer stock, continues without new business. While trading remains dull, the re- sumption of work in various centers where women's shoes are manufact- ured, and the probability of a fur- ther starting up of factories before long, is causing more inquiry for leather. Sentiment in footwear lines has improved, and conditions may be- come more favorable after the turn- of the year. At this time, with inven- torying in progress or contemplated important changes are not to be ex- pected, although holiday demands may somewhat accelerate retail dis- tribution.
