er or not such an as and such an agreement is practical, and whether it really will benefit the farmer and pay him more for his produce

That it is the one big question. Exporience elsewhere has taught that it will benefit the farmer, that it is practical, and that it is the only modern and advanced way of marketing or making the most on the produce. California's success with the system has been phenomenal. With fruits as he: long suite, perishable fruits, for which the demand is always limited, she took North Carolina's place in the agricultural standing this year, and the reason was one other than the fact that she used cooperative marketing associations to sell her pro-

The principle of the system, the mying of the middle expense and the middle mea's salaries, and the power of organization and the control of the markst, is self evident after the consideration of the process is made It is a question of getting the farmers to have faith and sign the contracts en manes, in order to carry the state farmers collid in this move forward.

When Dr. Kilmer ascerted yesterday that we had advanced almost to the fimit in the way of producing, and had learned how to make the most and the biggest yield out of an acre of land, he told the truth. When he and Mr. Tomlinson stated that in martoting we were just where we were sevenig-five years ago, the truth was told, It 1. that in which we most make ange, and now is the opportunity

A change, and now is the opportunity. The campaign is just beginning. A large group of workers are starting on a county wide canvase this week to get the farriers to sign up the con-tracts and show the state that they can think ciently and honesity, and that they can see what is plain as day, and want a change, buneficial change, is the matching system as it exists the marketing system as it exis ay.
