INTERVIEWING A CANDIDATE
Reporter Got His Speech Mixed Up With a Friend's Medicine Ad.

(From the Atlanta Georgian.)
"It was in Memphis, some fifteen years ago, when I was doing a column of interviews at the hotel, and there came to the Gayoso a distinguished planter and politician from down in Mississippi, at that time a leading candidate for governor, who was noted for two qualities: extreme reticence with newspapers and violent antipathy to patent medicines. Indeed, I believe that while in the legislature he had fathered and fought for a bill to bar all proprietary preparations from the State.
"It took me two days to trail this distinguished visitor into a corner and two hours to persuade him to give me a brief interview on the gubernatorial election then pending in Mississippi. It happened that he really had something he wanted to get into the papers in order to help his chances of election, but he insisted that never in his life had he been quoted correctly and never had landed in some kind of trouble. But I was persistent.
"Look here," I said, "I'll write out this interview right here, get it exactly like you want it, and you can read it and give it your o. k. Then there can't be any mistakes."
"Finally he agreed, looking over my copy, and we parted. I turned in the story, it went into type and found a place next day on the front page. But the absent-minded son of a gun whose job it was to make up the forms got the first paragraph of my story mixed with the second half of one of those 'paid reader' advertisements, and it came in cold print something like this:
"Col. Wilfred J. Doanberry of Eliptown, Miss., one of that state's most distinguished statesmen and a candidate for governor before the approaching primary is registered at the Gayoso. Though reluctant to talk for publication, he consented to make the following statement:
"For years I have been suffering from addition to the morphine habit. Despite the pleading of my wife and friends, it grew steadily worse until I would stop at nothing to obtain the drug I craved. I went from bad to worse until there seemed no hope left. Finally I heard of your wonderful discovery, and after taking three bottles of Surimoloy's surefire Opium Oblivator I am entirely cured, and take pleasure in recommending it to my friends."
"I never found out," said the reformed reporter. "There was a train for New Orleans 30 minutes after the paper came off the press, and I took it. But learned afterwards that he retired from the gubernatorial race."

LOOK WHAT A KENTUCKY MAN HAS TO SAY ABOUT CHOWS!

While in Raleigh last week I was talking with a gentleman by the name of Mr. Butler and he tells me that he was on a stock farm for most two years and they were simply wild over Cow Chow and Pig Chow. They received it in car lots. Just think of this Kentucky being a place where a good many of the so-called leading brands of feed are manufactured, but still they buy from Ralston-Purina Company. Why? Because it is far superior for the whole world wide to any other feed that can be obtained. Sold in Checkerboard bags only by L. P. Surles. 20 F 1t.
