

BOLL WEEVIL NOT TO SPREAD FURTHER

Has Already Covered Practically the Entire Cotton Growing Section

"This is likely the last year in which the farmers of North Carolina will be interested in the actual spread of the boll weevil," says Franklin Sherman, Entomologist for the North Carolina State Experiment Station. "Hereafter we will be more interested in the damage the pest will do and in methods of combatting his ravages because after this year we will not have very much territory left to invade."

"At the close of 1921, the weevil had reached a line running approximately as follows: Hickory to Salisbury, to Raleigh to Wilson, to Washington and to Belhaven. No specimens were found north of that line until late August of this year, when the new migration began."

"Now we have specimens from the following outmost points: at Advance in Davie, in southern Alamance at Milledgeville, Waka (at Raleigh of course), northeastern Edgecombe near Hobgood, Scotland Neck in Halifax, Windsor in Bertie, all of Martin, and at Crosswell in Washington County. It so happens that as yet we have no actual record of it from any other county which actually touches the Virginia line, though such a record may develop any hour. The weevil is likely in the southern part of Northampton already."

From the specimens coming in to Mr. Sherman at present, it is known that the weevil has reached Albemarle Sound, but no specimens have yet come from north of the sound. Nor has he any record of it up to this date from such outlying cotton counties as Orange, Durham, Granville, Vance, Warren and Gates.

Mr. Sherman states that the new territory invaded in 1922 is due to escape with rather light injury in 1923, with damage being much more severe to the south and eastward. This new territory will be due to receive normal severe injury in 1924. Mr. Sherman urges all cotton growers to secure and study Extension Circular 124, "Farming Under Boll Weevil Conditions," which can be secured from the local county agents or from the Agricultural Extension Service, Raleigh, North Carolina also Farmers Bulletin 1262 of the United States Department of Agriculture. "The Boll Weevil Problem," which may be secured from the county agent or from the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

"Glory to Mr. Culbreth"

At last one preacher has been found who has called the turn on the Ku Kluxers' methods of using the church for advertising purposes, praise be. This preacher—may his tribe increase—is the Rev. Frank Culbreth of the Methodist church. He was holding a meeting at Rowland Robeson county, when the kluxers put on their usual advertising stunt. Newspaper readers are aware that every few days there is a news story of members of the Klan marching into some church where services are in progress clad in the "robes of their order," which means that they are disguised, and interrupting the service to hand the preacher a letter approving his work and making a donation for some charitable or religious cause, and then march out. The brazenness of the advertising scheme was so apparent that it is surprising the kluxers were not called to account for disturbing religious services. If they wanted to give the preacher a donation and express approval of his work they could have sent the letter through the mails, delivered it to the preacher's home by messenger or handed it to him on the street. But that would not have given them the publicity of marching into the church disguised and making sure that their right hands knew what the left was about while they used the church and the preacher to advertise the order. And until they tried it on the Rev. Mr. Culbreth all the preachers seem to have fallen for the scheme, either because they were in sympathy with the kluxers or because they didn't have the nerve to resent the methods of the kluxers. But glory to the Rev. Frank Culbreth! He not only returned the donation they attempted to give him but told the kluxers to their faces that he didn't approve their order and was not in sympathy with it. Possibly one happy preacher having shown the way others may have the courage to follow his example when the kluxers undertake to use them for advertising purposes.—Statesville Daily.

SHORAGE OF COAL WILL NOT BE ACUTE

However During Winter There Will be Some Shortage Caused By Strike.

Washington, Sept. 26.—Survey of the coal situation was said at the White House today to have convinced President Harding that although a shortage during the winter is inevitable as a result of the miners' strike the situation would not be particularly acute.

The President and his cabinet had before them at today's meeting a report from the Geological Survey which showed that effective steps have been taken to prevent a fuel famine. Coal is being moved to lake ports, the survey advised the President, in excess of the ability of lake carriers to move it to points in the north-west.

The President it was said, hopes to announce the personnel of the new federal coal commission next week. In the meantime he intends to give serious consideration to panels which operators and miners are expected to furnish. While the President has not obligated himself to appoint any person recommended by either or both the operators and miners, he was reported today as being glad to consider such nominations.

Venizelos and Others

Pittsburgh Dispatch.

When Venizelos so readily consents to return of Greece to dedicate his life to the service of his countrymen he speaks with the soul of the patriot, but the mind of the statesman immediately imposes warratable conditions he names—a decisive popular vote—probably does not bind him to the wackness of his people in view of his comparatively recent experiences. Nor is Greece's foremost public man deceived by enthusiastic agitation for the establishment of a republic to replace the monarchy. He probably traces that suggestion for a political shift to a reaction from the defeat of Greek arms.

Venizelos has not forgotten how lately the same Greek patriots who are now clamoring for his immediate return to save the country voted overwhelmingly to desert him and all his policies to cheer the exiled Constantine back to his throne.

as would become such a high official as such a tremendous plant as that with which he is associated. There was no grease on his elbows, no smut on his countenance nor coal dust on his nose. For the overall which he has been wearing for nearly three months as, here and there he fitted to fill the places and do the work which striking shopmen had formerly done, he was wearing the usual neat business cheviot, bedecked with a collar and necktie, his shoes were shined and his hair was parted in the middle.

MRS. CANNON DONATES MONEY FOR BUILDING

Concord Woman Gives $50,000 To Stenwall Jackson Training School

Concord, Sept. 27.—A gift of $50,000 has been made to the Jackson Training school, State Home of Correction for Boys, by Mrs. Ella Best Cannon, of this city, for the erection of a new administration building to replace the one recently destroyed by fire. The announcement of the gift was made this morning by James P. Cook, chairman of the board of directors of the school, who stated that the building would be a memorial to the late husband of the donor, James W. Cannon, prominent textile manufacturer, who died at his home here several months ago.

Work on the structure will begin next week and it is planned to complete the work within several months. The building will contain the office of the school, the home of the superintendent, a directors' room and 27 women instructors of the school. It will be one of the handsomest buildings of any of the State institutions and will be modernly equipped. The gift of Mrs. Cannon is the largest ever made to the school.

HAGENBECK-WALLACE CIRCUS

Among the trained animal acts that the majestic Hagenbeck-Wallace Circus will bring to Raleigh Tuesday, October 3, none will be more interesting than the feats of the pumas, which are said to have been trained with remarkable skill.

The puma, cougar, or panther as it was called by the early settlers of eastern part of the United States, is of the great cat family and generally is from six to eight feet long from the tip of the nose to the tip of the tail.

A century ago this animal was very plentiful in the states, but now it is rarely met east of the Allegheny Mountains. It may still be found in an Appalachian range and in the hills of the Middle West. In southern California, western Oregon and several other districts, a constant way is waged upon the species by the owners of cattle and sheep, in the hope of exterminating the beast.

The cry of the male puma is said to be one that will carry terror to the stoutest man, while the female wails like the wail of a child in distress. While very young the cubs are playful and kittenish, but with maturity they develop treacherous qualities. Nevertheless, skilled trainers have developed a sense of obedience in these beasts at the Hagenbeck-Wallace exhibition will reveal.

Trained animal acts are outstanding features of the program this season and with the equestrian acts, the exhibition is said to surpass all ever accomplished by a circus.
