HUMAN PARASITES OR HOME CONDITIONS

BY R. D. BUNN. You cannot fulfil a mission today, worth while in life, and live as a parasite on the home which reared you or on society. A young man or a young woman cannot succeed in any vocation of life and remain in the playground of childhood. Nor will your life even count for ONE unless you come out from among them and have some convictions of your own. For what place is that boy or girl headed who always relies on the parental strength for sustenance through life? Mark my words, I did not say the child should forget home or be disobedient to father or mother--this should never be forgotten. When your each manhood and womanhood you should do some real reasoning and thinking for yourselves. Don't expect to be fed from the family spoon all your life.

The story is told that out in the West the eagles build high in the tall trees. The young eagles are fed by the mother birds until they are several weeks of age. If the young eagle does not try to fly, the mother bird comes in and pushes him out of the nest as if to say, "Fly or fall." He has just an chance between the top of that tall tree and the ground. If he does not make an effort, what happens? If we fold our hands, the outcome will be that of the young eagle when he hits the ground.

If the parents in love and sympathy would let their boy, "I have given you parental care for 10, these many years. I have other obligations now, so sail away and look forward to building a home for yourself." Listen, I had rather be a foot-man in service for humanity than to be a parasite on father or mother. I had rather be a sign post at the forks of the road than to be a parasite on society.

In this day a young man who has all the strong faculties with which God created him and does not try to be a better citizen than his father or grandfather, is a parasite on the world and on his community. The person who is a human parasite and does not try to improve on parental guidance is a criminal to present-day citizenship. A real man will improve in the teachings and leadings of his forefathers. Any man who is trying to ride to success on the ancestral line of descent is committing a crime. Because my father is a college president, a leading minister, a noted physician, a pedagogue of the highest type, or a multi-millionaire, should mean nothing to me as far as this world's fame is concerned. The man who really loves home will never forget it. The man who tries to subsist on home does not love it. The real test never comes to the average man in the average condition, whether or not he stands for the principles of his home, until he gets the call of Abraham. "Get ye out from your father's land; there is a mission for you to fill for God, and He is calling you."

The farther we may roam from home, the dearer "Home, Sweet Home," grows to us as we hear the words sound and remain in the echoes over the hills. John Howard Payne, who wrote "Home Sweet Home," realized the words far more keenly than we ever can, for he never had a home, but knew what a home was to others. Did you ever notice the joy of one returning home? The joy of the young annual returning to its mother after being lost for a while? Then, too, there is the joy of the mother not to be forgotten.

With all this in view it is enough to make the blood of any red-blooded American boil to see so many parasites bringing the grey hairs to a tomb of sadness and gloom. The greatest joy that comes to any man in this world is through service for others, and there has never been known a parasite to serve anybody or anything. A human parasite is a "simple procrastinator," and procrastination is the thief of time.

The old home land, this country of ours, is being rent in twain through and by those things which detract from real home life and which take "sweet" out of "Home Sweet Home." In some cases it even changes a real home to a house. "So it's house again, yes, house again," for some people, but not for me. I have often wondered what are the things which are slaking the basic principles of home, of real manhood and womanhood. If I were to ask a hundred men to name ten of the greatest tragedies befalling boys and girls of today and which mar real home, sweet home, I am sure there would be several answers in common, but some would vary greatly. To me, here are some of the things which are destroying homes and which are causing boys and girls to run amuck in civilization today:

1. Lack of religious training in the home.
2. Movies.
3. Misrepresentation of woman suffrage.
4. Immorality.
5. Alcoholic drink.
6. A compromised message from the pulpit.
7. The wrong use of automobiles (it's stylish).
8. Anti-Christian officers and leadership (local and otherwise).
9. Procrastination.
10. Lack of respect for authority.

It's our duty to be anabolists, and not a katabolist. Be a builder, and not a destroyer. A man who wants to build always has a "job." A man who wants to grow always fights room. A man who wants to fight the parental ideal of life can't always do it under his father's roof. But we would not forget there are times when they can be lifted higher than anywhere else in the world. When home duties call, we will never be a parasite to "stay by the stuff." When you depend upon it for subsistence, then you are a parasite and it becomes a house and not a home to you.

The things which I have mentioned go a long way toward tearing down the principles for which a real home was established. (Some are involuntarily assisting and some are voluntarily subsisting.) What is your duty? What is my duty? What is our duty? Go back and resurrect the principles which have made real men and women today--some of whom equal will not be found in the next generation for the reason of home destroyer number one, which I mentioned above. Are there as many real homes today as there were in the sixties, in comparison with the relative number of homes? It has been said that there were ten real homes out of every twenty-five buildings. Is that true today? Wood, nails and mortar can make a beautiful house, but it's only one item in the building of a home. We long to see the day when humanity has backbone enough to cast into oblivion all the home-destroyers of the land, banish into exile every human parasite on the face of the earth and set up democracy and righteous training in every home in the land, and to see a real home in every house.
