Just Among Us WOMEN

It has been very amusing to observe the reactions of the columnists on this paper since the appearance of this feature a couple of weeks ago.

Along the Skyline I bought the Rambler, with a buoyant comradeship heretofore not enjoyed between us, he greeted me with an enthusiastic manner, "so you have burst forth as a columnist." "Not I," was my reply. "Nothing so spontaneous as that—It is the editor—he's making me do it."

I ran into the Cornfield Philosopher sitting in his split bottom chair tilted back against the wall, gazing out over the distance peaks, no doubt musing upon their weaknesses and frailties of the human race, with particular reference to the Mountaineers. He smiled at my patronizing smile and said, "so you have decided to become a columnist?" "Not I," was my reply. "I made no such decision—it was the editor—he decided it for me."

I bumped into Uncle Abe, with the following result. "What's that," he said, "What air ye headin' fer?" Now just cause ye have set yourself up to tell the women folks whar'er get off, don't make ye one whit smarter 'n ye was before, and certainly don't give ye no cause ter knock an old man around, just cause he ain't quite as spry as ye are." My reply, "Oh Uncle Abe, I am aw sorry, please excuse me, I did not see you—and you have me all wrong, I have not set myself up to tell the women where to get off—it's all the editor's fault—He's the one who
