ORATORY AND MR. HOOVER

In recent months Herbert Hoover has been one of the nation's most prolific speech makers. He claims that it is very hard work since the radio makes it impossible to give the same speech in every town as once was the case. He spends from two to three weeks at work on each speech. It is contended by some—though denied, naturally by Mr. Hoover and his friends—that a ghost writer is injecting the raciness in his present speeches.
