

WASHING CAR WETS DYNAMITE CHARGE—CAVE LIFE

Mrs. Lawrence Genaro, wealthy Dallas widow, probably owes her life to her neatness. Returning home from a trip, she found her automobile had become dusty from standing on the driveway at the side of her home. She ordered a servant to wash the automobile without moving it. It later was discovered that the washing had dampened a dynamite stick attached to the engine by unknown person and prevented it from exploding when the motor was ignited.

Salespeople Urged To Co-operate With Hospitality Group

The salespeople of the Waynesville stores can co-operate with other citizens and the Governor's Hospitality committee of Haywood county in several ways.

One of the first, sometimes the only personal contact a tourist makes in a city, is with the salespeople. It is fortunate for Waynesville that people employed in the stores are above the average in intelligence and ability. This makes the carrying out of such a program as has been outlined by the Governor's Hospitality committee a much simpler task.

The store employees by a thorough study of the points of interest of North Carolina, can make the stranger within our gates feel more welcome and at the same time give valuable information as to where to go and what to do during their stay in North Carolina. Strangers are always delighted when someone shows an interest in their visit and if the sales personnel has a complete knowledge of our city and surroundings there is every reason to believe that the visitor will appreciate this added attention.

Employees of retail stores should investigate the sports activities of area and so be able to recommend where to go for good fishing, hunting, horseback riding, golf, or other sports. The salesperson should be sufficiently informed to give directions and information about places of interest within and without the city. He or she should know the location and time of meeting of civic and social clubs open to strangers—the hiking club, the luncheon clubs—Such contacts with groups of similar interests will always breed a friendly spirit.

If each merchant would consider himself a committee of one to carry on some sort of intensive training for the instructing of his employees, upon the subjects mentioned above, the atmosphere of a friendly resort community would be enhanced.

Offers His Good Eye to Baby

Feeding Bears In Park Would Be Dangerous Practice, Says Eakin

Visitors In Park Will Not Be Allowed To Feed Bears; Would Run Risk Of Injury

Considerable publicity has been given to the bears in the Great Smoky Mountains National Park within the past few weeks. In view of the fact that both the press and the public are apparently unaware of a National Park Service regulation which makes it unlawful to feed bears, much of this publicity has been an undesirable influence, J. R. Eakin, superintendent, pointed out recently.

"Over a long period it has been proved that the feeding of bears by mankind tends to be detrimental to both parties. It makes of the ever-hungry bear a dangerous beggar natural caution has been overpowered by the case with which food is gotten from tourists; and the tourist in obliging this animal is running a foolish risk of serious injury. In time a begging bear becomes overly-insistent, and the danger to mankind consequently becomes greater. Food is the bear's chief concern, and as long as the animal is tempted by the smell or sight of food there is no telling what may happen.

"With the protection given all wild life in the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, practically all species have increased in number. Within this sanctuary the black bear now has no natural enemies, and it is to be expected that population of these animals will increase to such an extent that the hiker will have a good chance of seeing animals in their native home. Where mankind's food is not to be expected, the bear is a wild animal which will remain wild—in other words an animal which will not molest the hiker or the tourist.

"The authorities of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park positively will not lower the prestige of this marvelous wilderness area by being plagued by a number of dangerous, over-stuffed 'tourist bears,' consequently all visitors are urged to assist us in keeping our bears wild. This can be done by never feeding the animals, by reporting all such violations to our rangers, and by depositing all remains of lunches in containers which are provided for that purpose.

The bear problem in some of the western national parks where tourists have been feeding bears for years, has become a very serious matter. Dozens of bear bites or scratches have been reported each month and conditions became so bad it was necessary to break up the practice of feeding bears even if this required making arrests and assessing fines.

"When a bear becomes too insistent for food he is either trapped and removed to some remote section of the park, or destroyed. In the Great Smoky Mountains National Park 'tourist bears' must be destroyed as there are no parts of the park that are not used by the park visitors."

North Carolina has authentic records of cotton yields above three bales per acre, but of course that was before the boll weevil year, reports Frank Parker, federal statistician with the State Department of Agriculture.

North Carolina ranks third in the cash income from crops and 20th in the total crop acreage among the states in the Union, reports the State Department of Agriculture.

Over one-third of North Carolina's crop land is occupied by corn or more acreage than all of the cash crops, including tobacco, cotton, peanuts, Irish potatoes, sweet potatoes and truck crops, reports the State Department of Agriculture.

FINES CREEK GIRLS ON FARM PROGRAM

Geraldine and Dorothy Rogers, 4-H club members of the Fines Creek 4-H club, had a part in the morning program of the twenty-sixth annual Farmers Field day held at the Mountain Experiment Station at Swannanoa Thursday, August 18. They sang a duet, the song "Follow The Glean."

The State Department of Agriculture co-operates in developing about 170 different reports on crops and livestock during the year.
