

Old Registration Books Back Home; Will Be Used Again

The up-stairs office knowing what was going on. The books were found early Sunday morning by the night janitor, Bob Ray. He told The Mountaineer that he leaves the window on the front in the ladies' rest room slightly open when he cleans up, and that about 2 o'clock Sunday morning when he had completed his work, he went to lower the window and found the 22 books on the sill.

Janitor Ray took the books to the office of T. J. Cathey, county auditor, and locked them there for safe keeping, as Mr. Cathey's office is equipped with a private vault.

Mr. Cathey was somewhat bewildered Monday morning when he walked in his office, and found the books. He said: "I was surprised to find the lost books in my office Monday morning. I learned from the night janitor, Bob Ray, that he had found them in the ladies' rest room and brought them to my office for safe keeping. The books appear to be intact."

The news of finding the books spread throughout the county, and along with the news went numerous rumors. Some of the rumors carried names of persons alleged to have gotten the books, and also of parties credited with returning them. As far as can be learned, all these are unfounded.

Mr. Bryson said yesterday that if any investigation is undertaken that it will be left to the court and not the board of elections.

Mr. Bryson pointed out that all persons who are not registered, and are entitled to vote, must register on one of the three following dates: Saturday, October 15, Saturday, October 22, or Saturday, October 29th.

CORRECTION

In an article last week about the sewing room, mention was made that hospital trustees furnished material for uniforms for helpers at the hospital. This information given us was in error, as the girls, or helpers at the hospital furnished the material, and the sewing room made the garments.

We regret the error, which was in no way intentional.

Ill Health Forces Mormino To Close 34-Year-Old Store

drinks. It is interesting to hear him speak of the changes in his business since he established it thirty-four years ago. The period represents an important era in the life of the country, which has seen vast improvements in the way of refrigeration.

In the early years, his products came from Florida, California, South Carolina, Georgia and his best apples from New York state. Now it is quite different. Fruits unknown at one time on the local markets, are now shipped from Argentine, Brazil and other distant points, in addition to the markets of earlier years. He has catered to the most fastidious and exacting housewives and has always carried everything that could be had on the fresh vegetable markets, often losing money on the products, for the sake of accommodating his customers. Visitors have often, particularly those leasing houses here for the season, commented on the markets of the town, which always included Joe's fruit stand.

By thrift and hard work, and sound ideas of investing his earnings, Joe has become one of the leading business men of the town. He owns several valuable pieces of property in the community, most of which are located on Main street.

Along with his material success, he has been one of the most generous and civic minded citizens of Waynesville. He contributed to the local fund raised for the establishment of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park. He has never been known to turn down a call for money for any civic project. Though a Catholic by faith, every church erected in town since he came here has received a generous donation from him. His charities have been done in such a modest way, that they have scarcely been known except to their beneficiaries.

His family relations have been marked by deep affection. His wife, who before her marriage was Marietta Sansone, was also a native of Sicily, and was his childhood sweetheart, before he came to America. His first trip back to Italy was made in 1909 and he renewed his childish pledges. Then he returned to America, and worked hard for four more years, then back to Italy in 1913 for his bride, to whom he had become engaged on his previous trip.

Jack Way, cashier of the First National Bank, tells the story of the time Joe wanted to send his sweetheart in Italy a present. He had heard of the Bank of Marietta, (Georgia) and the idea of sending her a bank note issued by that bank bearing the name "Marietta," very dear to him, struck his fancy. Mr. Way secured the note and it was sent to Marietta Sansone in Italy.

In this day of unrest and conflicting sentiments stirring the land, trying on every hand to tear down the ideals upon which this nation was founded, Joe Mormino's patriotism for his adopted country is an inspiration. He wants to spend the rest of his days here, and his family to live here always. He says that he has been in nearly every state in the Union, and in several foreign countries, but that this is the finest place to live, and that he doesn't believe that you could find such generous and kind hearted people anywhere in the world as those with whom he has worked and lived the past thirty-four years.

He feels that the town is on the threshold of its greatest era, and that the next generation will see an expansion that was dreamed and talked of by their elders.

Mr. and Mrs. Mormino and two daughters, Genevive and Annie Eva, are planning to spend the winter in Florida, feeling that the sunshine and warm climate will be health restoring. Customers will be glad to learn that while the fruit stand will be closed this winter, it may be opened again in the spring. For "Joe's" has become a landmark of the town.
