Eskimo Courtship Law Changed At Demand Of Young Folk

The young people of the Eskimo North like those in Cleveland, Ohio, or in New Haven, Conn., have ideas. For generations it has been the native law on St. Lawrence Island that a suitor must work four years for a wife. Furthermore his parents, in most cases, arranged the match. The young people have been rebelling against this practice for a number of years and last summer Commander F. A. Zeuzler of the Coast Guard ship Northland, was called in to act as arbiter in the matter.

Consultations were held with the adults and with the younger generation and now a man need work only one year for his prospective father-in-law before marriage. The eligible are now privileged to choose their own mates. By this method, they argue, there will be fewer "unmarriages" or divorces. The youngsters even went so far as to ask for some document of marriage and this too was arranged, the schoolteacher acting as grantor of such a paper. The rebellion had gone so far that one youth was taken in the statement that no girl was worth more than three months labor before winning her.

Commander Zeuzler to the natives in the Bering Sea ports is not so much a commander as a confidant. All year they have up their problems and their triumphs for his inspection. He in turn, brings back to the governmental agencies interested in the Eskimo, reports and recommendations which help to improve the condition of these people.

He continues, "It must be borne in mind that the desirable parts of our civilization cannot be thrust upon the natives; they must be absorbed by him gradually. The fallacies of his civilization must be eliminated by proper instruction and example, not by the mere statement that they are all wrong and must be, therefore, discarded immediately."

Confusion arises between the citizenship of the Eskimo and his position as ward of the Government. The elder generation are in favor of continuing as wards of the Government. This is largely, Commander Zeuzler explains, that liquor may be kept out.

Confusion also arises for the native when two conflicting religious faiths are presented. One religious faith in a given community is recommended, as otherwise the conflicting teaching tends to make the natives lose faith in all religion. It is not difficult, it is explained, to teach the familiar precepts and stories of the Bible as they are not unlike the faith of most native religions.

Education, it is said, should be simple lessons in sanitation and personal cleanliness. The native should be taught care of his equipment, his boats, and his sleds. A higher education is called a mistake, except in the case of the unusual child. Otherwise it is held to unfit the native youth to work his way up and out of the folds of his own civilization.

Of the schoolteachers in the Far North Commander Zeuzler says, "I have found most of them well bred and high class. Their sobriety and morality are above reproach." He recommends that teachers be chosen not for their number of degrees but for their ability to work among the natives. A preliminary course is advised for teachers in which they should be instructed in their duties, their methods of living, and types of clothing to be worn.
