

NEWS FROM FT. JACKSON

By Bobby Sloan.
This may be a trivial matter to you, but to us it is of primary importance—little red bugs which have their ambition, making life miserable. When you have to go for a day without a bath, and that bath when it comes, nothing more than what you can do with about four inches of water in a slow moving creek. Whew!

Although this is not common knowledge one of the main purposes of this Tennessee maneuver is to train the soldiers of the Second Army (and the 30th Division, attached temporarily to the Second Army, of course) in tactics of tank defense. It is a long jump from learning the theory of tank defense, to actually applying it on the field so for the most part, these weeks on the field in Tennessee are going to be spent teaching the soldiers this important phase of modern warfare.

To date, we have done little more than basic groundwork. The first battle was nothing more than a short field exercise similar to what we had been experiencing at Fort Jackson. This was to get the men acclimatized to the terrain of the region, and generally to get the kinks out after the long ride. The next exercises was a defense against infantry attack. This time the BLUES were very much outnumbered, but an orderly retreat was made, so that everyone concerned was satisfied.

Now we are beginning a new phase of the month's war games. We are learning defense against simulated tank defense. This begins, as do all new tactical phases, with a tactical map exercise for officers. After this exercise is completed, then the soldiers go to the field to put into practice what the officers direct. This time the mechanized enemy is simulated. Finally will come the third phase, defense against actual tanks, which will take place as soon as the mechanized division arrives in Tennessee. This division comes from Fort Benning, and got to Camp Forrest Tuesday.

This will be the final test, and I believe the 120th Infantry is going to come through with flying colors. To show you how high we stand in the estimation of our superiors, on Monday, June 9, the 120th Infantry was given the all-important job of acting as rear guard for the division in the retreat. This was a very important maneuver. Simulated tanks were used against us, and altogether, the retreat was about twenty miles long, back to the Manchester, Tenn. area where we started our drive from a week ago.

By the time you read this, we will be going through battles against tanks. Can we stop them? Remember, most of us have never seen a tank. Against their defense, we have anti-tank guns, and are supported by light artillery—most of it .75 caliber size. I'll let you know all about it next week.

Officers Elected By Haywood Young People
Haywood County Methodist young people held their June meeting in the Fines Creek Methodist church Monday evening. The Rev. Joe Shackford welcomed the group and was followed by Longs Chapel young people who gave the worship program. Long's church won the attendance banner.

The feature of the evening was the election of officers for the new year. Leaders selected by the group are: President, Sue Cooke, First church, Canton; vice president, Dick Bradley, Waynesville Methodist church; secretary, Lou Bell Boyd, Shady Grove church, Jonathan Creek; treasurer, Mary Finger, Dellwood Methodist church.

would have been surprised to see the congregation. No announcement or invitation had been extended to the soldiers, but still there were twice as many there in uniform as there were civilian members of the congregation, and I imagine this was the case in all the churches in the vicinity. When you take into consideration the fact that there are already almost eighty thousand men on the field, then it is not so surprising that of this group you would have so many to go to church. Many of them (and could I say us?) hoped just by chance that we would be invited to a home-cooked Sunday dinner. Who can blame us for hoping. The people are so kind that many soldiers were invited into the homes today for a meal. I was not that fortunate.

I would like to mention something which is very close to my heart, and that is something which I had to come to the army to learn. That is, that it is the people who appear on the outside to have so little, who in reality have so much in the way both of human kindness and a hospitality which is rich beyond description. As a soldier, if I were asking a favor, wanted a drink of water, or something of that nature, and had the chance either of going to a big house in some city, or to a small white cottage on a hill far from a city, I would chose the cottage every time. There is no way of adequately describing the wonderful warmth of human friendship you find in the small house, with people who from the outside appear to live in poverty. They are generally most kind, and it makes you want to do something in return. If soldiers ever are called on to give sacrifices and endure the hardships of war, it will not be in defense of an idea or a philosophy developed by some new-thought leader; it will be to defend the rights and liberties of people like the MacDowells and Farmers, who in their simple ways have shown so many of us how democracy really should work: not through the spouting of some idealistic demagogue, but through the simple acts of kindness performed by the Smiths and the Joneses, after all the backbone of America. That after all, is the only thing worth living for, and so—

That's all for this week, folks.
