Potato Growers Will Have AAA Allotments

Under the 1942 agricultural conservation program any farmer who had an average of three or more acres of potatoes during the years 1939, 1940 and 1941 will be considered a commercial grower and will have a potato allotment established for their farm. This ruling will also be applied to any farmer who plans to harvest three or more acres during 1941, it was learned from the county farm agent's office this week.

All farmers who come under this classification are requested to visit the farm agent's office and give the necessary information for establishing a base acreage for their farm and to bring with them any farmer in his community who might come under this group.

Farmers having an acreage of three or more acres of potatoes in 1942 will be penalized under the agricultural conservation program if an allotment is not established. However it is to the farmer's advantage to have an acreage allotment established, if he intends to plant as much as three acres, according to the county agents. Allotments of less than three acres will not be established, and only those growers who come under the class of three or more acres need apply to the office.
