

Waynesville Pastors To Expose Moral Conditions From Pulpits

Waynesville pastors announced yesterday they had joined in the annual clean-up campaign, and that from pulpits Sunday, would present facts on existing moral conditions in Waynesville.

"We are going to face moral issues, and bring to light some things that need being brought to the surface," a representative of the group said.

The pastors have held several conferences and pooled their facts together and will use the same statements from their respective pulpits for the Sunday morning services.

They would not make public any of the material they had on hand, other than to indicate that "the clean-up will be popped off on existing conditions."

"You may rest assured that no punches will be held back. Straight, hard hitting from the shoulder will be the order to the attack," one spokesman said.

Indications are that the churches will be filled to capacity Sunday as the pastors simultaneously go to bat in a moral clean-up crusade.

REA Plans To Expand Right After the War

"We are making plans for expansion right after the war is over," Jimmy Moore, superintendent of REA told Rotarians here Friday.

"Present restrictions prevent us from connecting our lines with any house more than 250 feet away, and of course the appliance business is out, but in spite of all this, we are working with the national office, and making a map, showing every house in the county. Our ultimate goal is to serve every rural home with electricity," Mr. Moore continued.

The Famous Keith Twins, 44 Years Ago

Two of the soldiers going from here to Cuba in the Spanish-American War were twin brothers, George and Sam Keith, from the lower end of the county. They looked so much alike that their officers never learned to tell them apart. Dr. Tom Stringfield, who was their officer, tells of some interesting events that happened during the campaign, in the accompanying article. This is one of several hundred pictures Dr. Tom has of the Spanish-American War period.

for training, and in six months after leaving here, were on the high sea sailing for Cuba.

A few hours before the regiment arrived in Havana the Spanish had killed about 60 Cubans, and conditions indicated immediate and serious trouble.

The regiment marched through the streets, and the happy natives started cheering and shooting fireworks. But there was no trouble with the enemy that day.

Among the more than a hundred and twenty-five men in Company H were twin brothers, George and Sam Keith. They were so much alike that Dr. Stringfield could not tell them apart. It was a custom of the brothers to celebrate pay day by drinking. Usually one would land in the guard house, but being identical in looks, gave the brothers an advantage, in that the free one would visit the jailed brother, and after a few minutes, the "prisoner brother" would walk out. The guard could not tell which was which, either. A little later the prisoner would return, and in pretense of chatting with his brother, would let the rightful brother go his way.

The twin brothers were color guards for the company, and according to Dr. Stringfield, always gave the officers of the com-

Highway Department Salvaging Used Motor Oil

The North Carolina State Highway and Public Works Commission is meeting the rising cost of motor oil by re-refining used oil drained from the crank case of the 6,000 pieces of highway department equipment.

Highway Chairman Ben Prince estimates the reclaimed oil will amount to around twenty-five per cent of the highway commission's average consumption for a year.

Up until last year state contract price for oil was about twenty-five cents per gallon; the last bid received for the same quality oil was forty-seven cents. The reclaimed oil costs at most fifteen cents per gallon.

In view of the rising oil prices Highway Equipment Engineer S. C. Austin replaced his outmoded re-refining equipment which was heated by gas, and as a result was quite hazardous, with a modern electrically heated outfit which has a capacity of 200 gallons per day of nine hours.

Operation of the new oil reclaimer is quite simple. Used oil is dumped first into a huge screen-covered, iron tub and then pumped into two worn out tank cars where it is allowed to settle. After five days in the tank cars, water is drained off from the bottom and oil is ready to be poured into the refiner.

Fifty-five gallons of used oil and 35 pounds of petrol filtering material are poured into the continually agitating tank of the reclaimer. The mixture is heated to 450 degrees and allowed to remain at that temperature for fifteen minutes. The oil is then forced through 29 sheets of special filter paper (which resemble blotters) by compressed air. Oil is then pure and is placed in barrels which are delivered on the same basis as new oil to the highway division shops.

Each highway shop and prison camp has its oil pool into which is dumped the leavings from the equipment cranks. When a trip has to be made to Raleigh, oil is placed in drums and sent along. There is a supply of some 15,000 gallons of oil awaiting re-refining, an amount which piled up while the new reclaimer was getting into operation. About 10,000 gallons have been refined during the last three months. Reclaiming has been done on a small scale for eight or nine years.

Highway chemists make careful tests of the oil runs and have found the average viscosity weight

Col. Lee In Chicago For A Major Operation

Col. Wm. Ira Lee has gone to the Hines Veteran Hospital, Chicago, for a major operation, which will be performed shortly.

is about SAE 30 to SAE 40. According to those chemists, the re-refined oil is as good as the new product. Hal Tharrington, Raleigh shop superintendent, goes so far as to claim it is better.

Filter papers have to be cleaned of a thick tarry coating after each run, but can be used up to eight times. Bi-product of the re-refining process is a fine penetrating oil.

The rubber in four pairs of men's overshoes would make a single pair of army galoshes, 60 containers for 75-mm shells can be made from a pile of 100 old newspapers, and one pound of brass pipe contains enough metal to make eighteen .30 cal. cartridges.
