Now, fifteen times ON THE OTHER FOOT MR. ALLEN HOPPING is hard work. Charley Allen is puffing, perspiring — and feeling foolish. But he gladly follows the doe's directions. Charley's buying another life insurance policy — and, at the same time, another stake in his electric light and power company. Probably, like most folks, he doesn't look past the policy. But it's a fact that his insurance company will take his premium dollars and put them to work for him — partly in utility securities. Here are some interesting figures furnished by the Institute of Life Insurance: 1. As of December 31, 1942, 67 million people owned 134 million life insurance policies in 300 different companies. 2. These companies, in turn, owned $5,060,000,000 of utility securities.
