Lament On A Rock

(The following poem was sent to Charlie Buchanan by his cousin Ben E. Harrison, who is serving somewhere in the South Pacific.)

Some where on a South Sea Island where the sun is like a curse. And each long day is followed by another slightly worse. Where coral dust blows thicker than the shifting sand. And the white man dreams of a finer and colder land.

Some where in the Blue Pacific where a woman is never seen; Where the sky is never cloudy and the grass is always green; Where the goony birds fuss nightly robbing man of blessed sleep, Where there isn't any whisky and but two cans of beer a week.

Some where in the South Pacific where the mail is always late. Where Christmas Cards in April is considered up-to-date. Where we always have the payroll but never have a cent. Though we never miss the money 'cause there's no place to get it spent.

Some where in the South Ocean where the goony's moan and cry. And the lumbering deep-sea turtles come up on the beach to die. Oh, take me back to North Carolina the place I love so well. For this God-forsaken Island is awful close to hell.

That Nagging Backache

May Warn of Disordered Kidney Action

Modern life with its hurry and worry, irregular habits, improper eating and drinking - its risk of exposure and infection - throws heavy strain on the work of the kidneys. They are apt to become over-taxed and fail to filter excess acid and other impurities from the life-giving blood.

DOAN'S PILLS

From where I sit...

by Joe Marsh

"Your outfit looked mighty fine in the parade," I told Ed Carey, our fire chief. "Everything polished within an inch of its life, and the men pert and snappy!" "That's how it should be," said Ed. "We have Thursday turnout inspections... and surprise inspections in between!"

because they're looking for things to be wrong but... well, just an ounce of prevention! The brewers' self-regulation program is just a form of vigilance that protects everybody. Like the fire department's inspections, it keeps things the way they ought to be.

From where I sit, most people approve of the way the brewers run things these days.
