

State Board Inspects Test Farm Site Here

W. Kerr Scott, commissioner of agriculture, three members of the State Board of Agriculture, and several of the department inspectors inspected the Mountain Test Farm here Thursday.

Conducted over the farm by W. Colvard, resident director, the group was tremendously impressed with the beauty and the fertility of the 300 acres of land which were purchased early last spring at a cost of $45,000.

While here, Fred E. Miller, head of the Test Farms division of the Department of Agriculture, resulted with highway officials regarding the location of the highway which will intersect the farm and connect with paved streets in the Waynesville.

The visitors inspected sites for a poultry plant, foundation work which has already been completed, viewed plans for the office, barns, and other buildings, and over a renovated dwelling on the farm, and discussed various projects contemplated for the Mountain Experiment Station.

Arriving here at 10 o'clock after spending Wednesday night in Asheville, the party went directly to the new farm. D. Reeves Noland, a member of the State Board of Agriculture and the official responsible for the location of the farm in Haywood county, acted as host.

The visit to Waynesville concluded a four-day tour of inspection of farms, which began Monday at the Tidewater Experiment Station in Washington county and included a trip over the Upper Mountain Experiment Station in Ashe county Wednesday.

Noland entertained the visitors at lunch at the Tea Room Thursday.

In the group visiting Waynesville were Mr. and Mrs. W. Kerr Scott, F. E. Miller, Dean W. Colvard, board members Hawley Wood of West End, Claude Hall, D. Reeves Noland, Waynesville; and Thompson Green, director of publications.

During the visitors at lunch were following: Charlie Ray, Glenn Palmer, George A. Brown, W. C. Russ, Jonathan Woody, and Luther Shaw.
