WITH THE DEMAND for the separate blouse and skirt continuing without let-up, and with a big suit season already ahead, no wonder the blouse manufacturers are working overtime to fill orders. White crepe is used for the first of a smart brace of blouses. Short sleeves and deep round yoke are set off by inserts of sheer crepe. White crepe with inserts of coarse net at the shoulders, is used for the second blouse which is decked out with a cut-out embroidered monogram. All Eligible Women Urged to Join Legion Aux.

All persons who are eligible to join the American Legion Auxiliary are invited to come into the organization, according to Mrs. Hurst Burgin, president of the local post auxiliary, who points out that any wife, mother, sister, or daughter of a Legionnaire is eligible to become a member.

The American Legion Auxiliary offers educational and other benefits to the families of disabled war veterans and their work is much needed in the community, points out Mrs. Burgin.

Sixty per cent of the veterans who are now in the veteran hospitals are World War II veterans and the auxiliary especially wants the families of these veterans to come into the auxiliary, so this work can be carried on.

The dues of the American Legion Auxiliary members, which are only $2.00 per year, are distributed in a manner so that a great many people are benefited, according to Mrs. Burgin.

One dollar stays in the local treasury, to carry on the rehabilitation work, while the remainder goes to the state and auxiliary headquarters. The state sets aside 10 cents per capita for "child welfare," which is really the big job done by the auxiliary.

When the auxiliary sells poppies many people wonder what they do with the proceeds. Forty per cent goes to the state to be used for rehabilitation and child welfare and sixty per cent stays in the local treasury to be used locally.

The Child's Sleeping Habits

By GARRY CLEVELAND MYERS, Ph.D.

WHILE but few young mothers would admit it, an amazing number of babies and little children sleep with the mother. No doubt there has been an increase in this practice in recent years, thanks to the housing shortage. Then a good many young mothers, while the husband was in the armed forces, encouraged the practice because of the mother's loneliness and her greater difficulties while traveling or being with relatives, and failed to train the child in desirable habits. Even after the "war" family have settled in their own homes the sleeping-with-mother habit may linger.

Presumably, among the educated and well-to-do mothers there has been an increase in baby's sleeping with mother or of her rocking him to sleep, thanks to the teachings of a certain group of child specialists in recent years. Some of these specialists have told mothers not to let the youngster cry for want of company or cuddling and never to let him "cry it out."

Feeding Any Time In consequence, an occasional well-educated mother may, with good conscience, feed the baby any time he seems to be hungry, rock or teeter him at bedtime or when he awakens at night, or drag him into bed with her. It's such welcome advice. It offers an easy way to gain satisfaction here and now and escape immediate difficulties. But what is overlooked is the problem ahead growing bigger and bigger.

Some experts are wholly overlooking the habit factor in the young child. Now, as anyone knows, if a baby is soothed to sleep by being rocked or taken into bed with his mother he soon will choose to be soothed in no
