Fabrics are handsome, lines are long and the silhouette has a completely new look in the spring coat and suit parade.

Your new spring suit is almost sure to have a longer jacket than you have worn in the last five years. Just below the neckline is a popular jacket length for spring, although you may choose from various lengths, starting with hip-length and ending with tunic length. If you're a junior, and go for flared swing skirts, you may even settle for a bolero or waist-length jacket, but this abbreviated style is shown only in extremely youthful styles, invariably with circular skirts.

Your skirt, also, will be about two inches longer than last year's styles, unless it is the flared variety. Young customers are not accepting the longer skirt length for full skirts, the stylists tell us, but there is general acceptance of the longer length in straight, slim skirts.

In the spring coat lineup you will find almost any silhouette your fancy dictates, from the belted chesterfield style to the loose, hooded casual coat. Back belted coats are new for spring, with fullness confined to the back. You'll also find some ensembles around this season, for the first time since the war—matching suit and topcoat.

Fabrics are new and exciting, with handsome, colorful tweeds stealing the spotlight, and vivid hues all over the place.

There will still be many navy and black suits and topcoats, of course, but the new high colors and bold patterned tweeds are making the fabric news of the season.

Prices are still comparatively high, but you'll get more for your money this spring, in fabric, workmanship and style.

Perennial Charm

Navy crepe dress with white trim.
By VERA WINSTON

NAVY WITH a touch of white is a time-honored fashion that looks forever new, since it is capable of infinite variations. Crisp white pleated batiste cascades down one side of the bodice in a semi-heart shape, and edges the sleeves of this neat navy crepe dress. The overskirt buttons in back above a silver-slim underskirt. The neckline is convertible, the pleating can be turned back so that the neckline forms a V. This is a delightful frock for pleasant spring afternoons.
